P R E F A C E .

The following selection of Epitaphs, with the expansions, translations, and notes, originally appeared as a series of articles in the Canadian Journal. The epitaphs have been both selected and treated without any controversial aim; my object has been to provide a manual suited to the wants of those, who may desire to enter on the study of the sepulchral inscriptions of the early ages of Christianity as a branch of Epigraphy.

I have limited myself to the first six centuries P.C., not merely because the Consular fasti extend to about this period, but also because there are scarcely any subsequent epitaphs worthy of being ranked with specimens of ancient Roman Epigraphy. By adopting this limitation, also, I have had the important advantage, throughout my examination of the Roman epitaphs, of the valuable aid supplied by the Cavaliere De Rossi's learned labors, in his "Inscriptiones urbis Romæ Septimo Sæculo Antiquiores." In selecting only those inscriptions that bear dates, I have been influenced by the desire to leave as little ground as possible for questioning the age. No example has been given without *examination of competent evidence

* No one, but those conversant with epigraphy, can fully appreciate the necessity for such examination. There are whole classes of inscriptions so justly suspected, that no scholar would accept one of them without the greatest caution; such, for example, are the Spanish, given under the name of Cyriac of Ancona, or on the authority of Morales or Oeco, or the Italian, vouched for by Ligorio, a name of itself sufficient to excite the strongest suspicion. Ligorio, a Neapolitan, was a practised forger of inscriptions, which he sold to collectors, and many of his impostures have been exposed by scholars. His work, however, was confined to imitation of the Heathen tituli. But there were others who took up the manufacture of Christian inscriptions. The celebrated epitaph on Daciana Diaconissa, who was "the daughter of Palmatus the Consul, and the sister of Victorinus the Presbyter, and prophesied many things," although it passed the ordeal of Maffei's fastidious scrutiny, is now known to have been forged, and has been traced to Ferrar. See De Rossi, p. xxx. And yet Ackner and Müller, in "Die Römischen Inschriften in Dacien," published at Vienna in for its genuineness and correctness; and I have invariably stated the place

1865, cite this inscription as genuine. Bosio's great work in Italian, on the catacombs of Rome, is chiefly known by the edition in Latin of Paul Aringhi, who published what professed to be Roma subterranea novissima post Antonium Bosium et Joannem Severanum, in two volumes, that have a reputation far beyond their merits. There is no doubt that a second Ligorio imposed on both Severano and Aringhi. See De Rossi, p. xxvi. Again, Boldetti, who published what may be regarded as a supplement to Bosio, was so deficient in scholarship and critical acuteness, and so regardless of accuracy, that no reliance can be placed on his copies, even of inscriptions that he himself saw. As this may appear to some to be too harsh a censure on a writer whose authority was once held in high estimation, I subjoin one of the many adverse opinions pronounced on him by De Rossi, who was thoroughly acquainted with his work in all its details: Hujus (scil. Boldetti) in id genus apographis excipiendis imperitiam et incuriam non centena, sed millena exempla testantur. See p. 24.

In p. 82, 2nd edit. of "The Church in the Catacombs," Dr. Maitland remarks: "A curious epitaph found at Verona, probably not older than the seventh century, states why Felicianus wished a tomb reserved for himself alone: (Gruter.)

To the Divine Manes of Felicianus of Verona. I, Felicianus, of Verona, have consecrated this tomb for myself. I, who lived restless, being now at length dead, rest unwillingly. Do you ask why I am alone? That in the day of judgment I may more readily arise, without impediment."

There are, I think, but few epigraphists whose suspicion as to the antiquity of this epitaph would not be excited by its style and language, and their suspicions would, unquestionably, be just, for this Felicianus of Verona, the author of it, lived about the middle of the 15th century. He was a collector of inscriptions, medals and curiosities, and wasted much time and money on the application of chemistry to the production of gold. He is also known by his edition, in conjunction with Ziletti, of Petrarch's Degli uomini famosi, Verona, 1476. Maitland's mistake regarding this inscription is the more remarkable, as Fleetwood, in 1691 (Sylloge, p. 198), warned his readers not to accept this epitaph as ancient, and stated that its author flourished about 1463 A.D.; and similar information is given by Gudius, in the edition of Gruter's Thesaurus, Amsterdam, 1707.

(when known) where each was found, with the authority both for this statement and for the text that I have adopted.

The figures in the *lithographic plates are † fac-similes of the originals, as they are represented in De Rossi's work; the other inscriptions are given, according to common usage, in ordinary type. In these, consequently, there are omissions of various particulars, such as leaf-points, monograms, symbols, and other pictorial characteristics, but the signification of the words is in no wise affected, and the copies are printed with as much accuracy as I could attain.

The notes that I have given are few and generally brief, as many of the difficulties are explained in the expansions and translations. In the present publication, I have prefixed an Introduction, which will, I venture to believe, be regarded as a useful addition, especially as some of the topics that are treated in it have never before, ‡ so far as I am aware, been dis-

Other authors might be mentioned in illustration of the necessity for examining the authority for each inscription, but, probably, enough has been said on the subject. It is a more agreeable duty to bear my testimony to the remarkable merits of the Cavaliere De Rossi's elaborate volume, a work which is facile princeps of all that have been published on the subject, and to which I am largely indebted for assistance.

* I have added to those that appeared in the Journal a frontispiece, in which are given three inscriptions that have special interest, one on account of the symbols, another on account of the unexplained letters, and the third as presenting the earliest example of a cross in a dated inscription. They, also, are copied from De Rossi's work, but the first and second do not exactly represent the forms of the stones, as the lithographer, in order to get the figures into the page, was obliged to make one lap over the other, and to omit the lower line of the second. In every other respect, however, they are faithful copies.

† I have examined Perret's splendid volumes, but have not taken any extract from them. Their accuracy, even pictorially, cannot be relied on. Cardinal Wiseman notices them with the mild censure "perhaps somewhat overdone;" but Burgon does not hesitate to call them "simply a romance." De Rossi handles with tenderness "la grandiosa edizione," that "malgrado i suoi difetti" has assisted in spreading a taste for the study of the Catacombs, and which has cost the French nation "duecento quarantamila franchi." The plates subjoined to his own "Roma Sotterranea Cristiana," Roma, 1864, 1867, 4 vol., 2 of text (Italian), and 2 of plates, will bear close inspection.

‡ While these sheets containing the Preface and Introduction are in progress through the press, I have had my attention called to the Edinburgh Review, No. CCXLV, containing a paper on De Rossi's and other works relating to Christian and Jewish inscriptions. If I had seen it at an earlier period, I should have referred in more than one place in my notes on the Epitaphs to this very interesting article.

cussed in English. For further information on many of these, the reader is referred to De Rossi's Prolegomena. In order that requisite facilities for reference may be afforded to students, I have also subjoined an Index.

Although I have endeavored to make this little work as complete as possible with a view to the purpose for which it is intended, yet I am sensible that I have not accomplished all that I desired. A sufficient apology will, I trust, be found in the difficulties and disadvantages under which, in young communities, the rarer subjects of investigation are studied and the results of such study are published. I gladly acknowledge the benefits that I have derived from the use of the fine collection of epigraphic works belonging to our University, but I have often had occasion to regret my inability to consult other books, such as can be found only in Libraries that are the growth of centuries.

The number of dated Roman epitaphs of the first six centuries, including fragments, is 1374. Of these only 34 are older than 312 A.D., the year in which Maxentius was defeated by Constantine. There is but one of the first century, two are of the second, and twenty-four of the third.

INTRODUCTION.

Of the travellers, who have visited the Vatican, there are but few who have failed to notice the contrast between the Christian and Pagan inscriptions ranged on either side of the Lapidarian Gallery. Some of them have, doubtless, inferred that there are marked differences which uniformly distinguish the two classes, and that the peculiar characteristics of the Christian are simplicity and humility. For these inferences there are, undoubtedly, some grounds, but they are far from being universally true. Investigation will show that there are epitaphs, regarding which it is extremely difficult to decide to which of the two classes they belong; and that there are Pagan inscriptions, which are as little liable to the charges of ostentation or pride as any Christian titulus. In both classes we have examples of the omission of the names of the deceased, or of the simple mention of the names, with or without the age, and with or without the date (see p. xxi.)—many of the characteristics that are stated are identical (see p. xv.)—the epithets that are applied indicate equal tenderness of affection (see p. xv.)—there are similar evidences of domestic happiness (see p. 15)—in both, distinguished rank or position in life is occasionally mentioned (see pp. xv. 30, 31, 33)—in both are found extravagant laudations (see p. xvii.)—in both we have examples of that conciseness, which omits details, such as the cause of death, a particular rarely noticed in Pagan epitaphs, and still more *rarely in Christian—in both, we meet with uncouth prose and verse (see pp. 25, 30), disfigured by solecisms and inelegancies (as

* This is especially remarkable with reference to martyrdom, the notices of which—in original—not commemorative epitaphs, may be regarded as about the proportion of 1 in 2000. This peculiarity did not escape the observation of Muratori, who remarks on the epitaph of a girl of the age of two years and twenty days, 1958, 8:—“Ibi Vasculum Martyrii Signum. In sacris iis Contertiis duo potissimum mireris, Nempe quum tot Vasa vitrea aut figulina occurrant, nullam tamen in ipsis inscriptionibus mortis pro Christo toleratæ mentionem haberi, et præterea Infantes ob Fidem Christi morti datos fuisse.” compared with classical usage), that may be attributed to the ignorance of the authors or of the masons, or, rather, to the declining Latinity of the age, especially marked in colloquial forms. And yet, with all these points of resemblance—and others might be added to those that I have noticed—there are strongly marked differences, that must attract the attention of any careful reader. In the Christian epitaphs we find no fretful impatience under visitation, or angry questioning of the propriety of the bereavement, but, on the contrary, submission and resignation—no giving way to despair, but the calmness of hope—*no uncertain speculations or dim anticipations of future existence, but a confident belief in the resurrection of the dead and the life of the world to come. But let us examine the subject more minutely, and with this view consider it under the heads, Language, Names and Dates; †not that this is an exhaustive division, but that it seems well adapted to the wants of those entering on the study of Christian epigraphy.

I. LANGUAGE.

A student, who is accustomed merely to classical Greek and Latin, as they were written by authors melioris notæ, will find many startling novelties in Christian epitaphs, some †peculiar to them and some common to them and Heathen inscriptions. The novelties that will first attract his attention are probably those in grammar. Here we find, in orthography, such forms as filie for filix, que or qae for quæ, hac for ac, ic for hic, pride for pridie, mesis for mensis, michi for mihî, exibit for exivit, opsequia for obsequia, vixit, visit, bissit, or visse for vixit, adque for atque, quesquenti for quiescenti, depossio for depositio, &c. The lapse of Latin into Italian is marked by such changes as prefixing i, as ispirito for spiritui, or affixing e, as posuete for posuit.

* This is not universally true, for some Christians retained some Pagan superstitions. See p. 63. The latest example of the use of D. M. in a Christian dated epitaph, of which I am aware, is in Steiner's Cod. Inscrip. Rom. Rhen. i. p. 289. 609. of the date, according to his restoration, 440 A. D. I have strong doubts of the authenticity of this inscription, and cannot recognize Steiner's authority as sufficient for accepting it.

† A similar remark may be made relative to my division into eight classes in the Selection of epitaphs.

‡ The student should beware of regarding what may be new to him in Christian epitaphs as peculiar to them. Very many of the variations from classical usage are to be found in Pagan inscriptions, and some of them in authors that are not commonly read.

There are also varieties in inflexion, such as spiritu sancto for spiritu sancto, pauperorum for pauperum, Agapeni for Agapæ, Ireneti for Irenæ, Victoriaes for Victoriæ, vocitus for vocatus, requiescent for requiescunt, &c.

Of the ordinary rules of syntax we have such violations, as in sæculum for in sæculo, cum maritum for cum marito, pro sobolem for pro sobole, hoc tumulum for hunc tumulum; time "how long," commonly expressed by the ablative instead of the accusative, even annus for annos, &c.

There are also new or unusual terms, or familiar words in new or unusual meanings, such as pausavit, ἀνεπαύσατο, rested, bisomus, trisomus, quadrisonus, holding two, three, four bodies, compar and conpar, husband or wife, costa*, rib = wife, jugalis, yoke-fellow, † virginia, wife married when a maiden, † fecit for egit, passed, titulus, parochial church, percepit, received scil. baptism, as also consecutus est in the same sense, &c.

Sometimes Latin is written in Greek characters, of which there are examples in Epitaphs 18 and 42. See Plates II. 4, I. 1. Sometimes Greek in Latin, as zeses=ζήσσης=vivas. Neither of these usages is peculiar to Christian inscriptions.

The phraseology, also, deserves attentive consideration. The terms and expressions for our "Here lies" are hic jacet (not often), ἐθάδε κείται (often), hic situs est, hic positus, † depositus, dormit,

* In Epitaph n. 35. Can there have been here some omission by mistake? and is costæ by error for castæ? See Orelli, n. 4648.

† Thus also virginus = maritus. See p. 14. There is a surprising mistake relative to this use in "Die Römischen Inschriften in Dacien von Michael I. Ackner and Friedrich Müller." Wien, 1865. In n. 715, we have the following epitaph:—D. M. Valerius Locinus Vet. N. Cambestror vic. ann. XXXV VIII Aurd. Pirusi Virginio b. m. p. m. This is expanded as follows:—"Dūs Manibus, Valerius Locinus Veteranus Numero Cambestrorum, vizit annis XXXV VIII Aurelius Pirusius Virginio (!) bene merenti posuit monumentum." It is plain that Aurd. Pirusi are the names of the wife of Valerius Locinus and that Virginio is = Marito.

In n. 856 of the same work the sense of fecit is mistaken. The words are fecit in Dacia an. v., which are expanded:—felicit in Dacia annos V, as if fecit was given by mistake. The meaning is—"she passed five years in Dacia."

‡ In "Fabiola; or the Church of the Catacombs," p. 145. Cardinal Wiseman states his views relative to the terms depositus and depositio. "This lying in wait for the resurrection," he remarks, "was the second thought that guided the formation of these cemeteries. Every expression connected with them

* quiescit, &c. For death we have the tense forms defunctus est, alluded to the rising again. The word to bury is unknown in Christian inscriptions. "Depositus in peace," "the deposition of —," are the expressions used; that is, the dead are but left there for a time, till called for again, as a pledge, or precious thing, intrusted to faithful, but temporary, keeping. The very name of cemetery suggests that it is only a place where many lie, as in a dormitory, slumbering for a while; till dawn come, and the trumpet's sound awake them. Hence the grave is only called "the place" (locus), or more technically "the small home (loculus) of the dead in Christ." As these observations may convey a very erroneous impression, it seems necessary to state that there are numerous Christian epitaphs in which there is no notice, in any form, of the deceased having been committed to the grave, and that, where there is such a notice, neither depositus nor depositio is invariably used. We have positus est, hic jacet, hic situs est, tumulatus est, and, on stones not found in the catacombs, humatus est. In one example, De Rossi's n. 1192, we have the usual Pagan term referring to the funeral, clatus est. Even the term depositus cannot with certainty be claimed as exclusively used by Christians. Henzen, n. 6694, gives a Pagan epitaph found at Koppach, in Austria, in which D P seems to stand for deposito. Mommsen remarks—Vide ne sit DeFuncto. The suggestion is a good one, but scarcely satisfactory, for in the preceding part of this same inscription we have O for Ø, the ordinary nota for Øaróvri = defuncto. In addition to this, I have noticed the word depositus in full in another Pagan epitaph, given by Orelli, n. 4555. If the true reading here be, as it is given by Gruter and Orelli, depositus in vascello, the use is at variance with the idea relative to corpus integrum, as stated by me in my note in Epitaph 7. I have seen nothing, however, to shake the opinion there expressed, that our word "buried" is the equivalent of depositus. Morelli, de Stilo, ii. 78, evidently regarded the word in the same sense, and in the Lexicon attached to his work, sepulito is given as the Italian equivalent. It is proper, however, that I should add that I do not recollect having seen sepultus in any Christian epitaph of the first six centuries; it very rarely occurs in Pagan inscriptions. The learned Cardinal's views relative to "slumbering for a while" are inconsistent with the fact that the same metaphor for death was used by the Pagans. See Raoul Rochette, "Memoire sur les antiquités Chrétiennes des Catacombes," and Morelli, de Stilo, ii. 79. His statements, also, regarding the peculiar sense of locus or loculus, are contradicted by a similar use of the first of these terms in Pagan epitaphs, and of the latter in classical authors.

† The use of quiescit or requiescit is not peculiar to Christian epitaphs. They are found in Pagan. See Gruter, 446, 8; Orelli, n. 4493; Muratori, 1154, 7, 1614, 8, 2080, 11. Hic requievit is found in Orelli's n. 4494. The Virgilian placida compostus pace quiescit, and placida morte quiescit resemble the Christian formulae. The use of in pace was derived by Christians from the usage of the Jews, from whom they borrowed, as might be expected, some of their sepulchral emblems, such as the seven-branched candlestick, the dove with the branch, and perhaps, even the palm-branch, for this was certainly used by the Jews as well as by the Pagans.

decessit, recessit, de sæculo recessit, de sæculo exivit, reddidit sc. animam, reddidit debitum, Deo reddidit spiritum sanctum, pausavit, requievit, ivit ad Deum, migravit de hoc sæculo, recessit de hac luce, præcessit, τελευτᾶ, ἐτελείτησεν, ἀνεπαύσατο, ἐτελειώθη,* and the participial forms defunctus, absolutus de corpore, evocatus a Domino, †arcessitus ab angelis, receptus ad Deum, accepta apud Deum, obita, ἐξεληθὼν ἐκ τοῦ βίου, &c.

The age is expressed by vixit, or vixit in sæculo, annos (or annis or annus) —, menses (or mensibus) dies (or diebus) —, with the number of hours sometimes stated. Sometimes qui fuit stand for vixit, sometimes neither is expressed, and we have the form in the genitive, scil. annorum, &c. When the exact number of years was not known, the phrase plus minus, πλέον ἕλαττον, more or less, was used. Frequently the time passed in married life is mentioned, and we find such phrases as vixit mecum, duravit mecum, vixit in conjugio, fecit mecum, fecit in conjugio, fecit cum compare, with a precise statement of the number of years, &c., and often with some expression marking the happiness of the couple's married life, such as sine læsione animi, sine querela, sine jurgio, &c.

The epithets applied to the deceased indicate strong affection, and the eulogies are sometimes extravagant. Thus we have dulcissimus, carissimus, γλυκύτατος—πατήρ τέκνῳ γλυκυτέρῳ φιλῶς καὶ ζωῆς—innocentissima, piissimus, castissima, pudicissima, incomparabilis, amator or amatricæ pauperum, miræ industriæ atque bonitatis, miræ innocentæ ac sapientiæ (applied to a boy not five years of age), infantiæ ætus, virginitatis integritas, morum gravitas, fidei et reverentiæ disciplina (the four phrases applied to one female), totius pudicitæ veritas, and forma pudoris applied to others, &c.

The ‡occupation or position in life is stated, with the proper titles, in

* The use of cedo, decedo, excedo, and recedo, in the sense "die," is classical, but I do not recollect an example of any of these in Pagan epitaphs except decedo, whilst præcedo is characteristically Christian, but abscedo is, I think, found only and very rarely in Heathen sepulchral inscriptions.

† The Pagan forms were raptus a Diibus, and inter Deos receptus.

‡ There are some remarkable peculiarities in Christian epitaphs as to such statements. They scarcely ever mention the positions of liberti or servi, so frequently noticed on Pagan grave-stones. In De Rossi's "Roma Sotterranea," Tav. xx. 3, we have the following, found in the crypt of Lucina: D. M. Marcie Rufine digne patronæ Secundus libertus fecit, on which see his remarks, p. 343.

many dated Christian epitaphs, but they are all, I think, later than the

Another rarity in these sepulchral inscriptions is the mention of soldiers. Le Blant has instituted a comparison of the number found in Christian and in Pagan epitaphs, and finds that in 4,700 of the former the ratio is 0.57 per cent., and in 10,000 of the latter 5.42 per cent. There are, also, extremely few examples in which the designation—"Catechumen"—is used. It is very difficult to assign satisfactory reasons for these omissions and for that noticed in note p. xi.

There can, I think, be no reasonable doubt that many of the early Christians were slaves or freedmen. In Epitaph, n. 49, we have an example of a state of things, which must have often occurred—a Christian libertus in a Heathen household. As to the notices of Christian slaves in the New Testament, see St. Paul's Epist. Ephes. vi. 5; Col. iii. 22; Tit. ii. 9; and St. Peter's Epist. I. ii. 18. This remarkable silence relative to slaves and freedmen is by some supposed to be sufficiently explained by reference to St. Paul's Epist. Galat. iii. 28, where the Apostle states—"There is neither bond nor free." But if this reference be accepted, we should not have had any distinction between men and women in Christian epitaphs, for the Apostle adds—"there is neither male nor female."

Again, with reference to the rarity of mention of soldiers, it cannot be denied that we have sufficient evidence that a considerable number of Christians served in the army. In Epitaph, n. 57, we have an example of one of the Protectores, and both Nasarius and Nabor, mentioned in Epitaph n. 83, are said to have been soldiers. The legend of the Legio tonans seems to assume that the fact that Christians served in the army, in considerable numbers, was well known. But we have positive evidence on this point in Tertullian, even though he so strongly objected to the taking of the military oath by Christians. In his Apology, c. 37, he observes: Omnia vestra implevimus—urbes, insulas, castella, municipia, conciliabula, castra ipsa; and in c. 42—Navigamus et nos vobiscum et militamus. Although it may be regarded as pushing these statements too far to infer from them that "the army was full of Christians," yet I doubt not that there were many Christian soldiers in the early ages, and am persuaded that some of them served in the Cohortes Prætorie, Urbane or Vigilum, whose graves might be expected to be in the Catacombs.

The rarity of notices of Catechumens, even though the number of deaths in such circumstances must have been large, seems to be more easily explicable, for it may have seemed in many cases unnecessary to mention the position of those who were only in preparation for baptism, but had not been admitted into the church. Moreover, relatives may have been reluctant to record a designation which proved that the deceased were not baptized. But the silence regarding martyrdom presents extreme difficulty. The solution that would first suggest itself is, that a notice of this kind would expose the remains to outrage from such Pagan persecutors as might enter the Catacombs. But if we accept this, how shall we explain—as Muratori seems to put the question—the placing of such visible indications outside their graves as vasa cruoris plena? I have seen no explanation of the absence of the record of martyrdom, or of either the presence *time of Constantine. Epitaph n. 49 is not an exception, for it is really a Pagan titulus, with the addition of two lines by a Christian libertus.

The same designations of the place of burial and of the tomb are found in both Christian and Pagan epitaphs, such as tumulus, sepulcrum, locus, locus factus, locus emptus, locus concessus, locus donatus, memoria, sarcophagus, &c., even to the use of domus aterna. See p. 53.

In Pagan epitaphs we often find provision made for the interment of the survivors of the family, frequently for liberti and libertæ; often, too, some statement relative to the heir, such as H. M. H. N. S., Hoc monumentum hereditatem non sequitur, H. F. C., Hereditatem faciendum curavit; often, also, the dimensions of the piece of land stated, as I. F. P. XV. I. A. P. XV. i. e. in fronte pedes XV: in agro pedes XV. There are, I believe, no examples of such in Christian dated epitaphs. In De Rossi's n. 84, the words on the back seem to belong to a Heathen epitaph. In undated epitaphs examples must be extremely rare. I have noticed only one. Muratori gives it in 1960, 9. There are there, apparently, two readings of the inscription. I suspect that they are both inaccurate.

In the acclamations there are many points of resemblance, and some marked differences. Under this head—acclamations—I class expressions of good wishes or prayers to or for the deceased, or to or for the living. Of the forms of acclamation, addressed by the living to or for the deceased, we find among the Heathen such as Sit tibi terra levis, Ossa tua bene quiescant, Acc. Vale, Di tibi beneficiant, †Χαῖρε, Ἐπιλόει, Ἐὐδόμεναι, δέη σοι "Θεοῖς τὸ ψυχρὸν ἔδορ"; among the Christian such as Refrigera, Deus tibi refrigerelet, vivas inter sanctos, vivas in Deo, of the vessels or of their contents that I can consider as satisfactory, even though I am acquainted with the theories relative to the latter proposed by Besio, Röstell, and Maitland. And I must make a similar statement relative to the rarity of notices of slaves or freedmen and soldiers. Nor can I myself offer any solution that satisfies me.

* There is a strongly marked difference between the tone and language of Christian epitaphs before and after the time of Constantine, i. e. before and after the imperial recognition of Christianity. The sepulchral inscriptions of the later period retained but little of the primitive simplicity or expressive terseness that characterized the humble records of a persecuted or tolerated community. See De Rossi, p. cx.

† On these and similar Greek acclamations, some of which are used in Christian epitaphs, see Mariini's "Iscriz. Albane," Roma, 1785, p. 98.

Ειρήνη σοι, Ἐν θεῷ ζήτης, γρηγόρει, Ὁ θεὸς ἀναπαύσῃ τὴν ψυχὴν ἐν σκηναῖς ἀγίων.

Another of such forms is a prayer to the deities of the unseen world for the welfare of the deceased, e. gr. (Orelli, n. 4775), Peto vos Manes sanctissimæ (sic) commendatum habeatis meum conjugem et velitis huic indulgentissimi esse horis nocturnis ut eum videam.

This prayer is common in Christian epitaphs in Greek, e. gr. μνήσθητι, κύριε, τῆς κοιμήσεως τῆς δούλης σου, ἀνάπαυσον τὴν ψυχὴν τοῦ δούλου σου ἐν τῷ φωτινῷ ἐν τῷ ἀναψύξεως εἰς κόλπον Ἀβραάμ. In Latin, we meet occasionally with such as (Northeote, Catacombs of Rome, p. 148)—Domine ne quando adumbretur spiritus, &c.

Another form of such requests or prayers is addressed to the deceased to intercede for the surviving friends, or to do something for their welfare. Among the Pagan we have (Henzen, n. 7382)—Micvia Sophia impetra si quæ sunt Manes ne tam scelestum discidium experiscar diutius, and (Zell, Delect. n. 567) Parce matrem tuam et sororem tuam Marinam. Among the Christian we have pete*, roga*, ora pro nobis, &c., εὔχου ἐπὲρ ἡμῶν*, ἐρώτα ἐπὲρ ἡμῶν.*

Of the forms of acclamation represented as addressed by the deceased to or for the living, we find among the Heathen such as—Valete, Viatores salvete, Bene sit filiabus meis; among the Christian such as Ειρήνην ἔχετε, ἀδελφοί, Ειρήνη ὑμῶν πᾶσιν ἐν Θεῷ. I recollect but two examples, in Christian epitaphs of the first six centuries, of the address to the reader for his prayers, so common in mediæval times, but there is no doubt that this form was used by the Jews. See “Cimitero degli antichi Ebrei, &c., illustrato da Raffaele Garrucci,” Roma, 1862. Among the Pagans, a similar request was—Te rogo, præteritus, dicas sit tibi terra levis. Another form of such acclamations is that of conjuration or imprecation, such as, among the Heathen—oro per deos superos inferosque ne velitis ossa mea violare, qui

* The remark that I have seen in some controversial books, that there is but one example of these forms in the Christian epitaphs of Rome, is certainly not in accordance with facts, if the remark be applied, as it was, to all such inscriptions. It is true that there are comparatively few among the thousands that have no dates, and to this I may add that instances of the mention in such forms of others than the members of the family of the deceased are extremely rare. With reference to dated epitaphs of the first six centuries, I have not observed any example except pro hunc unum ora subolem, which occurs in De Rossi's n. 288, of the year 380 A. D.

violaverit deos sentiat iratos, or, among Christians—conjuro vos per tremendum diem judicii ut hanc sepulturam nulli violent, cum Juda habeat partem si quis sepulcrum hunc violaverit.

II NAMES.

The names that are *usually found in Heathen epitaphs in Latin are, of men, three, viz., the prænomen—nomen, and cognomen—e. gr. C · VIBIO · FIRMO; or, of both men and women, two, viz., the nomen and cognomen — e. gr. SEMPRONIO · DONATO, CALPVRNIA RESTITVTA.

A common arrangement of the †full style, especially in the case of soldiers, is — prænomen, nomen, nomen patris, tribus, cognomen, and patria — e. gr. M · ANTONIO · M · F · POM · AVRELIANO PALANTIA, i. e. to Marcus Antonius Aurelianus, son of Marcus, of the Pomptine tribe, a native of Palantia.

In the Christian epitaphs of the first six centuries, the occurrence of the three names is very uncommon; there is not a single example of †this after the third century. See Epitaph n. 41, and notes. During

* Information on the usual and rarer forms of names may be found in many treatises on the subject. Of these it will be sufficient to mention for the use of students,—Orelli, Nominum ratio apud Romanos, i. p. 472, with Henzen's additions, iii. p. 237, where further references will be found to discussions of onomastological questions, by Cannegetier, Zaecaria, Borghesi, Mommsen, Hübner, &c.

† I have not observed an example of this in a Christian epitaph. The father is sometimes mentioned, but not, so far as I recollect, in this form. Nor can I recall a single instance of the mention of the tribe. The birth-place, however, is occasionally noticed in Greek, but very rarely in Latin. See Epitaphs, nn. 45, 82. The absence of mention of the birth-place, in the case of those who were born in the same town in which they were buried, does not seem remarkable; such a notice is usually recorded in the epitaphs of those who were the natives of other places, as may be seen in Pagan military and naval funeral inscriptions. Similarly also the usage of mentioning the birth-place in Great Britain or Ireland is common among us (in Canada).

‡ Of the use of the prænomen, nomen and cognomen. Aurelius Fronto Titianus, named in De Rossi's n. 37, of A. D. 330, is not an exception, for Aurelius was never a prænomen. Flavius, although a nomen, was in later times used as a prænomen.

On this subject there is an astonishing statement in the critique on De Rossi's work in the Edinburgh Review, No. CCXLV. The author remarks: "M. de Rossi has printed twenty-three inscriptions with the names complete, prior to Constantine. Of these no fewer than seventeen have prænomens." There is only one of them that has a prænomen, viz., Tiberius Claudius Marcianus. The this century also even two names fell into disuse, and from the close of it, antius, entius, ontius, and osus, and their feminines, were common endings of sole names, e. gr. Amantius, Vincentius, Gaudentia, Leontius, Bonosus, Gaudiosa. Many of them were of a religious character, such as Adeodatus, Adeodata, Deusdedit, Quodvultdeus and similar compounds resembling our Puritan appellations, Anastasius, Anastasia, Paschasius, Martyrius, Joannes, Petrus, Thomas, Refrigerius, Kienatus, Redempta, Bonifacius, &c. Some are believed to have been chosen as indicating humility, as Fimus, Stercorius, Stercoria, Projectus, Contumeliosus, &c. See Epitaph n. 1, and notes.

There are many names common to both Christians and Pagans; among them the designations of animals, such as Ursus, Ursa, Leopardus, Aper, Tigris, Agnella, Muscula, &c., the names of months, such as Januarius, Aprilis, December, &c.; and even the appellations of Heathen deities, or derivatives from them, such as Mercurius, Apollinaris, &c. See Epitaphs nn. 1 and 26, and notes.

The number of names taken from the Holy Scriptures is small. Some previous statement of the Reviewer — “Of the ante Constantinian inscriptions, there are but two in which the three names occur, Marcus Aurelius Prosenes” (see Epitaph, n. 49) “and Tiberius Claudius Marcianus” (see Epitaph n. 41), is correct. De Rossi does not include the first of these in the twenty-three, because the name occurs in an epitaph inscribed by Pagans. A remark of the Reviewer, however, relative to the rapid disappearance of the three names is, in my judgment, well worthy of consideration. He doubts whether this characteristic is sufficiently explained by “the small proportion of patrician families among the early Christians.” In this doubt I concur. I cannot but think that a considerable number of persons entitled to this and other marks of rank were laid to rest in the catacombs, with no other distinction than a single name. This name, I am inclined to think, was the appellation given before or at baptism, by which members of the church were known among their community, and which accordingly marked their graves amidst their fellow Christians.

This use of single names, although certainly not universal, largely prevailed. Up to the time of Constantine, such names seem to have been generally not distinguishable from the Pagan appellations, but in and after his time, when there was no danger in the public profession of Christianity, names of a religious character, such as were but rarely given in the third century, became common. As I have adverted to these names, I avail myself of the opportunity to express my doubts as to the name of the parent of Severa, in Epitaph, n. 42. Following Orelli, and, as I now see, Muratori in his Index, I have taken it as Leuce for the mother. It may be that the name was Leuces for the father. I do not recollect having ever met with an example of either of these names.

have been already noticed, and it has been suggested to me that Mala, in n. 14, may be Mallah, of Numbers xxvi. 33. Reinesius, offended with the name, proposes to read Maia or Maca.

We sometimes find persons having two names, one of which may have been the Heathen, the other the Christian name. See Epitaphs nn. 11, 16. In the latter I have followed, with some hesitation, Montfaucon, Kirchoff, and De Rossi, in regarding καλόνημος as an adjective, but have inadvertently retained the expansion ἡ καὶ Καλόνημος instead of ἡ καὶ καλόνημος, "the also rightly-named." My hesitation arises from doubts whether the use of καὶ is consistent with the view that the word is an adjective.

There are some examples of pet names, such as Pitzinnina, i. e. "piccinnina" and "pizzinnina," pisinnus and pisiuna being also used for pusillus and pusilla. See notes Epitaph n. 11. We also find, but very rarely, Gothic names, such as Ereda (Freda?), Brinca or Bringa, Uviliarie, Trasarie, Sedaignuclus.

In Greek epitaphs some are ordinary Greek names, such as Στρατονείκη, Δημητρία, Ἀνατόλιος, &c. ; others are indicative of the character—such as Ἀγάθη, Εὐσέβιος; or have a religious reference, such as Θεόδωρος, Κυριάκη; or are drawn from Scripture, as Ἰωάννης, Μαρία, Στέφανος, &c. ; or are Latin names Græcised, or written in Greek characters, as Φορτουιάτους, Βικτωρία, &c. Greek names are often written in Latin characters, such as Nice, Elpis, Eirene, Euphrosynus, &c.

In some epitaphs the names of the deceased are not stated, in some cases, perhaps, for the reason suggested by Fabretti, p. 545, "quia solum in libro vite describi arcebant," but this omission of names is not peculiar to Christian epitaphs; it has been noticed in Heathen also. See Fabretti, p. 21. Some, perhaps, may cite as an example of the omission of the name in a dated epitaph, De Rossi's n. 148: Flavius Tauro et Florentio Cons. VIII. Kal. Septe. dep. in pace Q. vix. M. XI. D. XXVIII. i. e. "In the Consulship of Flavius Taurus and Flavius Florentius (i. e. 361 A.D.), on the eighth day before the Calends of September, buried in peace, who lived eleven months, twenty-four days." See also his n. 220. In both cases, however, it may be that the name has been obliterated, or lost.

III. DATES.

Even the shortest epitaph, in our time, usually contains the dates of the birth and death of the deceased, but the usage was different in ancient sepulchral inscriptions, whether Heathen or Christian. A marked distinction of both, as contrasted with modern custom, is their usual omission of the *dates of birth and death, especially of the former, mention of which is very rare; and a peculiarity of Christian as compared with Heathen epitaphs is that the former often give the year with the date not of death † but of interment. See Epitaphs nn. 2. 6. 7, 11, 12, &c.

* Sometimes, but seldom, we find very minute particulars mentioned, such as the day and hour of birth and death (and in Pagan the circumstances of the funeral) and yet unaccompanied by any notice of the year. The term for funeral is clatus est, of which I do not remember having seen any example in a Christian epitaph, except in De Rossi's n. 1192.

† On this subject, Cardinal Wiseman makes the following remarkable observations, in his tale "Fabiola; or the Church of the Catacombs," p. 146:—"In England, if want of space prevented the full date of a person's death being given, we should prefer chronicling the year, to the day of the month, when it occurred. It is more historical. No one cares about remembering the day on which a person died, without the year; but the year, without the day, is an important recollection. Yet while so few Christian inscriptions supply the year of people's deaths, thousands give us the very day of it, on which they died, whether in the hopefulness of believers, or in the assurance of martyrs. This is easily explained. Of both classes annual commemoration had to be made, on the very day of their departure; and accurate knowledge of this was necessary. Therefore it alone was recorded."

With regard to the number of Christian inscriptions in which the year of death is recorded, he had previously stated: "Although inscriptions with dates are rare, yet out of ten thousand collected, and about to be published, by the learned and sagacious Cavalier de Rossi, about three hundred are found bearing consular dates, through every period, from the early emperors to the middle of the fourth century (A.D. 350)."

Even if we accept the Cardinal's explanation of the necessity for an accurate knowledge of the day of departure with a view to annual commemoration, I can not understand what difference it would have made, if both the day and the year of departure had been recorded. But, independently of this, I cannot receive his statements as correct. The assertion, that "out of ten thousand, &c., about three hundred are found bearing consular dates, through every period, from the early emperors to the middle of the fourth century (A.D. 350)," is wholly at variance with facts. There are ten thousand without dates, and exclusively of these there are between thirteen and fourteen hundred that bear consular dates. Nor are these "through every period:" there are none known between A.D. 111 and A.D. 204. Neither are they "from the early emperors:" of the first twelve Caesars there is only one, and that of the time of Vespasian. Moreover, they do not close at the middle of the fourth century: the great majority are Consular Years.—The year is usually indicated by the names of the Consuls; and here there are some distinctions that are worthy of notice. The ordinary division of Consuls, as is well known, was into Consules Ordinarii, who began their consulship on the 1st of January, and Consules Suffecti, who took the places of those Consules Ordinarii who retired before the completion of their year. De Rossi, who has thoroughly examined the subject, states that the latter (Consules Suffecti) are not named in Christian epitaphs.

In order that we may more clearly understand the changes that were made in consular indications of the year, it will be advantageous to take an example of a complete formula. The full expression for the year 929 of the City, or 176 A.D., would be—sub Tito Vitrasio Pollione iterum et Marco Flavio Apro iterum, Consulibus. Now this might be contracted by the omission of sub, the substitution of numerals (II) for iterum, and the use of COS for Consulibus. This again might be abbreviated by the omission of the prænomina; and this still further shortened by giving merely the cognomina, so that the form in inscriptions might be POLLIONE · II · ET · APRO · II · COS. But even this might be cut down to POL · II · ET · APR · II · COS, or POL · ET · APR · II · COS; or even, finally, ET and COS might be omitted, or only one might be named.

Such abbreviations are found in both Heathen and Christian in-after that period; and instead of “about three hundred” up to A.D. 250, their number does not reach one hundred and fifty.

It should be borne in mind, however, that the learned Cardinal, when he made these statements, had not the advantage of referring to De Rossi's work, for it was not published until some years after the appearance of “Fabiola.” The latter was written in 1854, and the former was in the press from 1857 to 1862. The true explanation of his mistakes seems to be that he derived his information from a person who was unacquainted with some of the facts that were then known, whilst others have been ascertained since that time. A similar explanation, however, cannot be given of his error relative to the record of the day of death. I have reason to believe that the notice of the day of burial is more frequent than that of the day of death; and not merely is the day of death not mentioned in the majority of cases, but the absence of all dates, whether of day, month or year, is characteristic of the more ancient Christian epitaphs. It should also be recollected that the Christians derived their custom of stating the day of death or burial, and marking the year, from the Pagans, although from about the close of the third century this usage became so frequent among the former, that it may be regarded as characteristic. See Borghesi, Bullet. dell' Ist. di corrisp. Arch. p. 150, Rome, 1845.

scriptions of the first three centuries. Thus we have, in the latter, L · FAB · CIL · M · ANN · LIB · COS for Lucio Fabio Cilone, Marco Annio Libone Consulibus (i. e. 204 A.D.); DIC · IIII · ET · MAX · COS for Diocletiano quartum et Maximiano (tertium) Consulibus (i. e. 290 A.D.); PRAESENTE · ET · EXTRICATO · II (i. e. 270 A.D.), where II belongs to each and COS is omitted, &c.

The following characteristics of this period should be observed :— The omission of the name of one of the consuls is very rare ; the names are almost always *contracted ; the order of the names is not changed (which is true of Pagan inscriptions of the third century) ; the et, between the names of the Consuls, is almost without exception expressed. In the example of the Consuls of 204 A. D., which I have above given (the only example in Christian epitaphs of the use of the three names of the Consuls), its omission accords with the law, noticed by †Marini, that when the three names are given, the usage was to omit the copula. The omission of the numerals, to mark second or third consulships, is not uncommon (see Epitaph n. 90) ; but they are never omitted in cases where such omission would render the date doubtful. Where the name of only one Consul is given, and the number of his consulship is not expressed, we should understand his first. The word consulibus and its abbreviations are sometimes omitted, as in the example above given ; of this there is no example after the fourth century.

The abbreviation COS for consulibus was in use up to the middle of the third century, when COSS, CONS, and CONSS, began to be adopted ; COS is very seldom found during the fourth century, and almost never in the fifth or sixth ; COSS fell into disuse about the first quarter of the fifth century, and after that CONS was used, in the time of Diocletian with S for one Consul and SS for two. At the same time, CC · SS · and CS · were introduced ; but they were very rarely used in the fifth, and there is scarcely an example of them in the sixth.

Another abbreviation was the mention merely of the number of the Consulships, without stating the names, e. gr., the form TER · ET · SEMEL · COSS is used to indicate the year 202 A.D., in which Severus was Consul for the third time, and Caracalla for the first. Thus also the words AVG VIII ET CAESARIS mark the year 356 A. D., in which Constantius was Consul for the eighth time, with Julian as his colleague. This abbreviation, however, is very rarely employed in Christian inscriptions. See Epitaph n. 20, and Mommsen, Inscrip. Neapol. n. 7232.

* This contraction was continued occasionally in the fourth century, e. gr. NEE · ET · FAC · CONS, viz., Nepotiano et Facundo Consulibus, i. e. 336 A.D.

From about the middle of the fourth century, CONS began to be placed before instead of after the names, and this usage, frequently adopted towards the close of that century, became the prevalent custom in the fifth and sixth. Sometimes, where consulatu is expressed, we find a barbarous mixture of the two forms, e. gr., consulatu Modesto et Aryntheo. See Epitaphs nn. 58, 79. In Greek, from about the middle of the fourth century, the ancient term ἐπάτοις ceases, and ἐπατείε becomes the recognised form. In the fourth century, also, the terms Viri Clarissimi—* VC or VVCC—began to be applied to private Consuls, i. e. Consuls who were not Augusti or Cæsares. This usage became so prevalent that we have examples of their use without mention of consule or consulibus or their contractions.

The addition of the terms Senior or Junior, for the purpose of distinguishing persons of the same family, was used in the time of the Antonines, and we have examples of the latter applied to Valentinian in the close of the fourth century, but it was not until the fifth and 6th that it became common. The usage of defining the year by but one Consul rendered this addition necessary to distinguish persons of the same name.

The number of the consulship is stated in Christian inscriptions of the fourth and fifth centuries, where it is necessary to define the year, but is often omitted where it is not so required. At the close of the fourth century, and afterwards, bis and secundo are used for iterum, and at that time either words or numerals were used indiscriminately. In the fourth century, the use of † primum marking the first consulship is found, and there are similar examples in the fifth, but it never became common.

* We have examples of VVCC applied to one consul (see Epitaph n. 54), and of VC applied to two (see Epitaph, n. 74.) Cardinal Wiseman expands VC·CONSS in the latter ("Fabiola", p. 191). Viro Consulari, "a consular man," but this is not correct.

† De Rossi remarks: "Illud a vetere stilo toto calo distans, ut quisquam primum consul diceretur." The coins of the Emperor Severus of his first consulship have the numeral I after COS, to which, perhaps, there may be reference in the expression ter et semel Coss.

In addition to the modes already mentioned of defining the year by the Consuls or Consulships of that year, there was another, which came into use in the beginning of the 4th century, of which De Rossi finds the first Roman example in 307 A.D. This form was Post consulatum with the names of the Consuls of the preceding year. This was used when it was not known who were the Consuls of the year, or when the name of but one was known, or when it was necessary or expedient not to mention them. This form was expressed by the abridgments—POST CONS, POST CONSS, or even POST or POS. In the middle of the fifth century \overline{PC} came into use, and soon became the regular contraction. This form—post consulatum—was sometimes used, not merely of the year after the specified Consuls, but of several others in succession, e. gr. iterum post consulatum, of the second year; et iterum (or iterum atque iterum) post consulatum, of the third year. See Epitaph n. 72. The years post consulatum Basilii extend to XXIV, or, rather, this form seems to have been used even up to XXIX.

There was also another form, when there was one Consul for the Western Empire and the other for the Eastern, according to which the name of one Consul was given, with the addition et qui de Oriente (or Occidente) *fuert nuntiatu*s (in Greek, καὶ τοῦ δηλωθησομένου), or Orientalis is expressed, e. gr. Fl. Johanne Orientale, i. e. 538 A. D.

The term Imperatore—IMP—in Heathen inscriptions, commonly prefixed to the name of an Augustus, does not appear in Christian epitaphs before the close of the sixth century, except in one example of the year 279, where it occurs twice. De Rossi is of opinion, that in monuments of a later age than that in which the use of IMP was revived, we should read imperante or imperio rather than imperatore. In these later times the year of the reign of the Emperor is stated, and PP for perpetuo precede AVG for Augustus, e. gr. Imp D N Justino PP Aug An 6 Ind V = i. e. Imperante Domino Nostro Justino perpetuo (not Patre Patriæ) Augusto, anno sexto, Indictione quinta = 571 A.D. At the end of the fourth century and the beginning of the fifth, instead of AVGG we find AAGG and AAVVGG.

The letters DD · NN —*Domini*s Nostris—began to be used in the beginning of the third century, and continued in use to the close of the fifth. $\overline{DOM} \cdot \overline{N}$ and \overline{DOMNO} were not used until a later age. There are examples of the application of these letters DDNN to private Consuls, but this seems to have arisen from inadvertence or ignorance. See De Rossi, p. xxiv. and Epitaphs nn. 76, 97.

The term Nobilissimi, applied to the Cæsars from the time of Commodus and Severus, does not appear in Christian inscriptions before the fourth century, and then is not limited to those who were Cæsars. In consequence of this extended application of the term the Cæsars were styled Florentissimi and Beatissimi.

2. Æras, &c. Another mode of marking the date was by giving the year of the æra, e. gr., of Spain, of Antioch, of Mauretania, &c. Of the few examples of this mode in epitaphs, there is not one in any of those found at Rome. See Epitaphs, nn. 24, 25, 61, 81. There are two examples in epitaphs, in which the date is indicated by mentioning the existing Bishop of Rome, scil. sub Liberio Episcopo, and sub Damaso Episcopo, in both cases marking preference for them in opposition to their rivals. See De Rossi, n. 139, and Epitaph n. 36. The first of the Indictions, or recurring periods of fifteen years, began in A.D. 312, on September 1st, and this mode of marking time was first employed in Egypt. In a later age, from about the middle of the sixth century, examples are found indicating that January 1st was taken as the day from which the Indictions were counted. The most ancient examples of Indictions in Roman inscriptions are of the dates A.D. 517 and 522, See De Rossi's nn. 965, 984, and p. 21. For examples of Indictions, see Epitaphs nn. 38, 67, 73. In a few, not older than about the middle of the sixth century, the year of the Indiction is given, but of these it is unnecessary to speak, as no inference as to the year A.D. can be drawn from them, unless when accompanied by other marks of a definite character. See Epitaph under n. 68. In some epitaphs the date is given so fully that the day of the month, the day of the week, and the day of the moon, and sometimes even the *hour, are stated. See Epitaphs nn. 86, 87, 88. In Latin, the day of the month is, with very few exceptions, stated in the ordinary way with reference to the divisions of Calends, Nones, and Ides. For exceptions, see Epitaphs nn. 12, 49. In Greek there is, sometimes, the peculiarity of using names of the months different from the Latin designations, e. gr., the † Macedonian terms, viz.

* Both in Christian and Pagan epitaphs we have examples of half hours, such as VIS, i. e. six and a half—even scrupuli ($\frac{1}{2}$ $\frac{1}{2}$) e. gr. Bene merenti in pace Silvana quæ hic dormit. Vixit ann. XXI. mens. III. hor. IV. scrupulos VI. In the statement of the period of married life there is sometimes similar minuteness, e. gr., Silvana Niciati marito bene merenti cum quo vixit annis tribus mensibus duobus oris uidecim. See Fabretti, pp. 96, 186.

† On the Macedonian months, see Clinton's Fasti Hellenici, iii. 347.

Feritius, Panemus, &c. The days of the month are expressed, not by decades, but according to the Latin forms. It should be noticed, however, that ἀπὸ καλαριῶν does not signify before, but after the Calends. See Corsini, Not. Græc., p. 57.

The days of the week are given in the ordinary designations, scil. Dies Solis (Dies Dominica) Sunday, Dies Luna, Monday, Dies Martis, Tuesday, Dies Mercurii, Wednesday, Dies Jovis, Thursday, Dies Veneris (Parasceue), Friday, Dies Saturni (Dies Sabbati) Saturday.

The investigations regarding the Cyclic marks of time, i. e. the day of the month, day of the week, and day of the moon, as compared with each other and with the year, are very intricate. This difficult subject, which had engaged the attention of Sismondi, Binard, and Antonio and Mario Lupi, was most successfully treated by Marini. Cardinali and Visconti have contributed additional information, but by far the most satisfactory discussion of the subject is by De Rossi, in his Prolegomena and Notes, to which I must refer my readers, as it would be impossible to compress within my limits any satisfactory treatment of its details.

In addition to the Language, Names and Dates, the Symbols also deserve attention. I have given incidental notices of them in pp. xiv 22, 45, 67, but I have not treated them under a separate head, partly because their discussion would occupy too much space, and would require additional illustrations, and partly because they seemed to belong rather to the artistic than to the scholastic treatment of the epitaphs. The character of Christian art, as displayed in the Catacombs, has attracted much interest, especially since the publication of Lord Lindsay's Sketches, Padre Marchi's "Monumenti delle Arti Cristiane," and M. Perret's "Les Catacombes de Rome." The subject does not lie within my present province, and I have, consequently, refrained from offering any remarks on it. For the same reason, I have omitted reference to the Geological and Architectural features of the Catacombs: M. Michele Stefano De Rossi has contributed an able dissertation on them to his brother's "Roma Sotterranea Cristiana."

I. THOSE IN WHICH ONLY THE NAME AND DATE ARE STATED.

VIBIV · FIMVS · R · VII KA · SEP
DIC · IIII · ET · MAX · COS

(E coemeterio Callisti*; De Rossi, n. 16.)

Vibiu (Vibius) Fimus recessit, VII Kalendas Septembres, Diocletiano (Diocletiano) IV et Maximiano Consulibus.

"Vibius Fimus retired (from this world), on the seventh day before the Calends of September, in the Consulship of Diocletian for the fourth time, and Maximian [for the third time]," i.e. August 26th, 290, A.D.

De Rossi compares Fimus (dung) with the name Stercorius, commonly used by Christians. Thus, also, we find Stercoria applied to females. It is believed that such appellations were chosen by Christians in humility and self-abasement. I am inclined to think that, at least, some of them were not selected by those, who bore them, or by their relatives, but were applied by the heathen in contempt, and then adopted. We often meet with names common to both Christians and Pagans, and sometimes find the former strangely called after heathen deities, e.g. Mercurius.

* Coemeterium is used to denote a "Catacomb," and the inscriptions, that have been found in the Catacombs, are distinguished by the term coemeteriales, although the words do not necessarily imply "subterranean."

I have followed De Rossi in reading R as recessit; others prefer requiescit, or reddidit, sc. animam. We should have had III after MAX, for Maximian was consul for the third time in the same year (290) in which Diocletian was consul for the fourth time.

IGNATIVS · SEM

ETASCLEPIODO
TO COSS ·

(In cinea supra coemeterium Petri et Marcellini; De Rossi, n. 19.)

Ignatius Semnus, XV Kalendas Februarias, Hannibaliano et Asclepiodoto Consulibus.

"Ignatius Semnus, on the fifteenth day before the Kalends of February, in the Consulship of Hannibalianus and Asclepiodotus," i.e. January 18th, 292, A. D.

There is an ellipsis of a word between Ignatius Semnus and XV. Kal. Feb. Either decessit or depositus—"died," or "was buried,"—may be supplied; of the two, the latter is the more probable in Christian epitaphs. A similar ellipsis is found in heathen sepulchral inscriptions. Thus, in the collection given by Ianzi, Saggio, i., p. 162, we have COELIA A · D · X · KAL · DIIC, i.e. Coelia ante diem X Kalendas Decembres, scil. "Coelia, on November 22nd." whereby we should understand, that her bones were collected on that day. See Mommsen, Inscrip. Latin. Antiq., p. 210. In his n. 887, we have P for Positus, and in n. 957, ossiva, i.e. ossa.

Constantio Aug. II et Constanti (Constante) Aug. (Cons.) Nonis Decemb. Clau(di)anus dormit in (pace.)

"In the Consulship of Constantius Augustus, for the second time, and Constans Augustus, on the Nones of December (i.e. December 5th, 339, A.D.), Claudianus sleeps in peace."

"The burial of Octavilla (took place) on the ninth day before the Calends of September [in the Consulship] of Romulus," i.e. August 24th, 343, A.D.

'Ρωμούλι, with the Latin ending of the genitive, stands for 'Ρωμούλου, i.e. ἐπατείῃ Ῥωμούλου.

Gaudentius, die III Kalendas Augustas, Sergio et Nigriniano Consulibus.

"Gaudentius, on the third day before the Calends of August, in the Consulship of Sergius and Nigriniaus," i.e. July 30th, 350, A.D.

DEPOSTIO SEDATI XII KAL

ET TODOSIO CONSS

(In coem. Theodore; De Rossi, n. 291.)

Depostio (depositio) Sedati, XII Kalendas Decembres, Gratiano V et Todosio (Theodosio) Consulibus.

"The burial of Sedatus (took place) on the twelfth day before the Calends of December, in the Consulship of Gratianus, for the fifth time, and Theodosius," i.e. November 20th, 379, A.D.

I have regarded deposicio as "burial." There are examples of its use, in which it might be considered as standing for the place, or for the body itself.

DEPOSITVS LEONEDES IN PACE
D IIII NONAS APRIL POST CONS
IOANNIS ET VARANA

(In S. Agnetis extra Muros; De Rossi, n. 739.)

Depositus Leonedes (Leonides) in pace, die IV Nonas Aprilis, post consulatum Joannis et Varana (Varanæ or Varanis).

“Leonidas was buried in peace on the fourth day before the Nones of April, (in the year) after the Consulship of John and Varanes,” i.e. April 2nd, 457, A.D.

I have uniformly translated depositus by our ordinary word, “buried.” There are some, who think that it is used with a special reference to the resurrection. Thus Northcote, “The Roman Catacombs,” p. 143, remarks: “Each body, as it was laid in its grave, was said to be depositum there; deposited, that is, only for a while, to be reclaimed again in that day when the sea and the earth shall give up their dead.” This is a pleasing, but, in my judgment, incorrect interpretation. The word depositus, meaning “laid down,” is used by Classical authors in the sense “despaired of,” and “dead.” See Virgil, Æn. xii., 395; Ovid, Trist., iii., 3, 40; Ex Pont., ii., 47.

In Christian inscriptions, I regard it as signifying no more than “laid down,” i.e. that the body (corpus integrum)—not merely portions of it, as was common among the heathen—was “buried.”

II. THOSE IN WHICH ONLY THE NAME, AGE, AND DATE ARE STATED.

SERVILIA · ANNORVM · XIII ·

(E coemeterio Lucinæ; De Rossi, n. 3.)

Servilia, annorum XIII, Pisone et Bolano Consulibus.

“Servilia, of thirteen years (of age), in the Consulship of Piso and Bolanus,” i.e. 111, A.D.

This inscription has no distinctive mark of a Christian epitaph; and yet the circumstances, under which it was found in the Catacombs, seem to warrant its being placed among them. See De Rossi, n. 3.

If this be a Christian epitaph, as it probably is, it is more ancient than any of those, not found in Rome, that bear dates. We must read in line 3, HERMIAS; and in line 7, K·APRIL. See De Rossi, p. 15.

Hic jacet Muscula, quæ et Galatea, quæ vivit annis duobus, mensibus duobus, et diebus XVII. Deposita XV Kalendas Augustas, Gratiano Augusto II et Probo Consulibus, in pace.

"Here lies Muscula, who was also called Galatea, who lived two years, two months, and seventeen days. Buried on the fifteenth day before the Calends of August, in the Consulship of Gratianus Augustus for the second time, and Probus (i.e. July 18th, 371, A.D.), in peace."

It has been suggested that Galatea may have been the heathen, and Muscula the Christian, name of the deceased. Thus we find in Reinesius, n. 452: Accia vel Maria est nomen mihi Tulliana, i.e. her heathen name was Accia, but her Christian, Maria. This notice, however, of two names is not rare in heathen epigraphy. Perhaps Muscula was her pet name. In the text, I have adopted, in the third line, De Rossi's reading of ET for IT. The use of the ablative for time "how long," is common in inscriptions. Sometimes we have the two constructions in the same sentence, as in n. 34.

As Leo was twenty-six years of age at his death, it is evident that this epitaph is of the date, October 8th, 386, A.D.

l. 1. Requiescet. As if it were of the second conjugation: similarly quiescet and requiescent, for quiescit and requiescunt. In Gruter, 998, 10, we have Hic requiescent, in a heathen inscription, said of the living, i.e. we have the ordinary future.

I have given Kirchoff's reading and expansion. Corsini read the last line thus: Φ. Ας. Φ. ASC, i.e. after emendation, Flavii Ariovindi et Flavii Asparis, giving the names of the two consuls. De Rossi suggests: ΦΑΣ ΦΑΥCΤΟΥ, i.e. Flavii Fausti, or 490, A.D.

These consuls were Anicius Faustus, for the second time, and Virius Gallus. See De Rossi, p. 28, and Clinton, Fasti Romani, ii., 194.

*Ἡ καὶ, like the Latin quæ et, is frequently used to signify "who also was called." Here I have taken καλώνυμος as an adjective, as it has been understood by Montfaucon, Kirchoff, and De Rossi. The signification is, that her name, Simplicia, was a true indication of her habits and manners.

The abbreviation, whereby the names of the Emperors, or of the Emperor and the Cæsar, were omitted, and merely the numbers of their Consulships stated, is rare in Christian inscriptions. The most obvious example of it in heathen tituli, is—TER ET SEMEL COSS, i.e. 202, A.D., in which Severus was Consul for the third time, and Caracalla for the first.

"Here has been laid a sweet spirit, guileless, wise, and beautiful, by name Quiriace, who lived three years, three months, eight days. Buried, in peace, on the fourth day before the Ides of January, in the Consulship of our Lord Theodosias Augustus, for the second time, and Merobaudes, a most distinguished man, for the third time," i.e. January 10th, 388, A.D.

The name Quiriace is another form of Cyriace, both being Κυριακή Latinized.

There is great difficulty as to the junction of Merobaudes with Theodosius, in the second consulship of the latter. The Fasti, laws, and public acts mention, in his place, Cyregius. The best solution, of which I am aware, is that proposed by De Rossi in his note.

I have given this example on account of the use of DNI, which is not common. If we had ANNO DNI, it would, of course, refer to the Christian, or Dionysian, æra; but this is said to have been first used in the year of Christ, 525. As it stands, DNI = Domini means Augustus, referring to his subjugation of Spain. Or, is DNI a contraction of Domini, i.e. of Roman rule?

The terms designating animals were commonly applied as names of persons, both by pagans and by Christians, who, also, were in the habit of using figures of those animals as representatives, as in modern heraldry we have "canting arms," armes parlantes. Thus, in the Catacombs, we find a lion for a man named Leo, a little pig for a girl named Porcella, with the object, as is believed, of enabling those who could not read, to distinguish the loculus of a friend or relative.

Felix, sanctæ fidei, vocatus (vocatus) iit in pace, cujus tantus amor et caritas reuencitur (retinetur) ab amicis: in ævo qui cum esset fuit solacius, misericors, omnibus notus. Agrippina fecit dulcissimo suo marito, cum quem (quo) vixit sine lesione (lesione) animi annos III et menses X. Fuit in sæculam (sæculo), quod (quoad) vixit, annos XXXIII. Depositus, XIII Kalendas Septembris, Valentiniano, Nobilissimo puero, et Victori (Victore) Consuli.

"Felix, of sacred honor, (when) called (away) went in peace, whose love and affection are so warmly cherished by his friends: who, when he was in life, was known to all for sympathy with the afflicted and compassion towards the distressed. Agrippina made (this) to her very sweet husband, with whom she lived, without jarring, three years and ten months. He was in this world, whilst he lived, thirty-two years. Buried on the thirteenth day before the Calends of September, in the Consulship of Valentinianus, the most noble boy, and Victor," i.e. August 20th, 369, A.D.

l. 1. Sanctæ fidei. Literally "holy faith," but the meaning seems to be "of sacred honor," "of strict integrity." Vocatus for vocatus, as probitus, rogatus. l. 5. Sine lesione animi. Northcote, "Roman Catacombs," p. 137, seems to regard such statements of conjugal harmony, as peculiar to Christian inscriptions; but this eulogy is often found in heathen epitaphs, both from husbands to wives, and vice versa. Other forms of it are sine querela, sine jurgio, sine dissidio. Hence, Kenrick, "Roman Sepulchral Inscriptions," p. 42, justly remarks: "The married life of the Romans appears to have been remarkably free from domestic differences." l. 7. Nobilissimo puero. Nobilissimus was the term applied to the Cæsar from the time of Commodus and Severus; but, in the fourth century, it was extended in its use.

Viscillus Niceni, costæ suæ, quæ fuit annorum plus minus XXXI, cæ quibus durabit (duravit) mecum annos XV. Feci in se si eo dono sim. Exhibit (exivit) de sæculo, VI Idus Julias, Mamertino et Nevita (Nevitta).

“Viscillus, to Nice his rib, who was of thirty-one years (of age) more or less, of which she passed with me fifteen years. I made it for ourselves, if I am (should be) worthy of such a gift. She departed from this world, on the sixth day before the Ides of July, in the Consulship of Mamertinus and Nevitta,” i.e. July 10th, 362, A.D.

1. 1. Niceni. This change of the declension of nouns is common. Thus we have Leopardeti, Eireneti, &c. Ispeti, for Spei, is a notable example of metaplasmus, with the introduction of the prefix i. See n. 41.

Burgen was not aware of this usage. In p. 197, he gives an inscription—flicæ Mercuraneti—and asks: “Who ever heard of such a name as Mercuraneti? and yet, since I am sure that the word is copied accurately, what else can the nominative be?” It was Mercurane, otherwise Mercuriane.

Costæ. There is no authority for the use of costa for uxor, but there are two examples in Greek, in which Gregory Nazianzen uses the term, doubtless with reference to Genesis, ii., 21.

1. 3. Feci in se si eo dono sim. It is very difficult to give a satisfactory interpretation to these words. Lami, to whom we are indebted for the suggestion that costæ stands for uxori, does not attempt to explain them. Oderic enquires: an forte FECI, hunc nimirum titulum, ne conjux mea SINE EO DONO SIT, nempe ne careat hoc amoris mei pignore? Damzetta proposes: FECIMUS IN SEculo SINE VILLO DOLORE SIMul. De Rossi justly rejects both of these. He explains FECI IN SE, as standing for FECI INTER SE, i.e. annos XV feci una cum ea, and explains EO DONO as governed by dignus understood; whilst he regards SIM as used for fuero, or fui, i.e. si tamen eo dono dignus fuero, or fui—“quo elogio non aliud aptius Christianæ uxori ab viro Christianæ humilitatis studioso potuit inseribi.”

This is an ingenious, but unsatisfactory, explanation. I am inclined to take feci in the ordinary sense, “made,” and se as used for “ourselves;” and, adopting De Rossi’s suggestion of an ellipsis of dignus, to regard dono as referring to the “gift,” or “blessing,” of burial with her; but I am not satisfied.

“To Eirene, who lived forty-five years, more or less, passed eight years with her husband, who retired on the third day before the Nones, in peace, under Bishop Damasus,” loc. 366 or 367, A.D.

Mamachi, Zaccaria, and Morelli inferred from this inscription, that the names of the Bishops of Rome were used, from the fourth century, to mark dates. But, in all the dated epitaphs, there is only one other example of this use. See De Rossi, n. 139. The reason for using the terms sub Damaso Episcopo here is, that in the first two years of his Episcopate there was a rival bishop, Ursinus, or Ursicinus, whose claims were supported by a considerable portion of the laity. The deceased, or her friends, took the side of Damasus.

This use of contra votum is found in heathen inscriptions. The origin of it, I suspect, was, that when a person had made a vow contingent on the recovery of some one from illness, he was disinclined, or was afraid, to omit the performance of the vow, even though the object had not been attained. Here, and in other places, the words simply mean "against the wish." Mark the use of both U and V. l. 2. LA. In De Rossi's copy we have XL: I have followed Muratori.

i. 1. The use of the three names—Tiberius Claudius Marcianus—deserves special notice. There is no example of this in any Christian epitaph after the third century. This characteristic, and the identity of the names of the deceased with those of the wife of the Emperor Elagabalus, who was contemporary, have suggested the suspicion that the family was of good rank. In Orelli, n. 4570, we have another Cornelia Paula of the date 211, A.D. This inscription is the earliest of those bearing dates that are accompanied by symbols. Those used here are the fish and the anchor. The fish, as is well known, was chosen, as the letters that form the Greek word for it, scil. ΙΧΘΥΣ, are the initials of Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς Θεοῦ Υἱὸς Σωτήρ—Jesus Christ, Son of God, Saviour. Tertullian regarded it as a fit emblem of Him, whose children are “born of water” in baptism. The anchor is regarded as signifying “the close of a well-spent life, the conclusion of a successful voyage, when the anchor is cast;” or that hope, which “we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast.” Both these symbols are mentioned by Clemens Alexandrinus, as suitable for representation on the seals of Christians.

She (died at the age) of fifty-five years, and eleven months, (and) ten days.”

(E. co. matris Saturnini; De Rossi, n. 11.)

This is the celebrated inscription that Lupi was the first to explain. Marini pointed out that the numerals, which he read ζL, were written ἀντιστρόφως, i.e. = Lζ = 56. De Rossi shows that those numerals were really VL, which, according to Marini's view, he takes for LV. He corrects the error of Lupi, as to the Consulships being the second of Claudius, and the third of Paternus, and also ascertained that Lupi's suggestion, that the word before αννοωρωμ may be martura, not mortua, must be rejected, as the letters are distinctly ΜΟΡΤΟΥΑ, i.e. mortua.

l. 4. Λευκες. In Muratori, p. 27, we have Luceus as the Latin form of this name, and in p. ccelxvi, Leuces. Orelli, n. 1022, gives Leuce. l. 5. εἰσπνερω σαγκτω τουω, i.e. ispirito (spiritui) sancto tuo. This use of i as a prefix is often found in Christian epitaphs. It is one of many indications of the lapse of Latin into Italian. The change of person—tuo for ejus—occurs in Classical authors. The points in this, as in some heathen inscriptions, are no indication of the intervals between words.

"You yourself, who reared (us or me), now occupy a lasting resting-place; here you have reached the end that you deserved, of a course fraught with great perils: here, in happiness, you take the repose that age compels. Here is laid Foster-father Antimio, who lived seventy years. Buried in the Consulship of our Lord Arcadius, for the second time, and Flavius Rufinus, most distinguished men, on the Nones of November," i.e. November 5th, 392, A.D.

The history of this epitaph is very curious and instructive. De Rossi's comment on it, in which he gives an account of the controversy that it excited, is well worth reading. It is a good specimen of the slashing style of annotation, with which Bentley has made English scholars familiar.

The stone bearing the inscription was found near Rome, in the year 1787. Antonio Paoli first published it, with an engraving and a long dissertation, Di S. Felice papa e martire, in which he attempted defendere la sua santità, ed il suo pontificato, referring FELIX, in the third verse of the epitaph, to the Pope, known as "Felix the Second." Such an attempt, of course, drew down on him the censure of men of superior learning, who knew, from unquestionable historical authority, that Felix the Second was not buried even near the place where the stone was found, and, besides, that his death occurred not in A.D. 392, the date on this stone, but in A.D. 365. *Marini published a short treatise on the subject, in which he completely refuted Paoli, and showed that the epitaph was neither of Felix the Second, nor of any other Pope, but of a foster-father (papas), whose name was Antimio, i.e. PAPAS ANTIMIO. Paoli, however, was not convinced of his error, but attempted to vindicate his views in 'Lettera in difesa dell' epitaffio di S. Felice II.' Oderic and Tiraboschi then assailed him, sustaining Marini's interpretation, and Juvenati satirized him in severe hendecasyllables. Even then Paoli clung to his mistake, and published another letter in his defence, so absurdly erroneous, that De Rossi designates it as stuporis plenam, quam eruditorum nemo vel uno verbo refutare dignatus est.

The controversy relative to the interpretation of the epitaph here died out, but, since then, it has been revived by Dr. Maitland and by *Bishop Kip. Neither of these writers seems to have been aware of the discussion which had taken place. Maitland's observations on it are:—"The date of this Consulate is 392, in which year no bishop of Rome died. Siricius was made pope in 385, and lived to 396; yet the reference to a perpetual †seat, added to the title papa sanctissimus, strongly indicates episcopal rank. This Papa may have been an anti-pope, there being a schism at that time in Rome." De Rossi derides his ignorance totius controversiæ vel lippis ac tonsoribus notæ, and ridicules his object in citing the epitaph. There is no doubt that Maitland was unacquainted with the literary history of the inscription, and that he misread and misinterpreted the words papas Antimio. But De Rossi's censures are too strong, and he seems to have misunderstood Maitland's object. Maitland was not the only one, besides Paoli, who was mistaken relative to this inscription. Fea—hæud sordidus auctor—held the same opinion, that it was the epitaph of some bishop; and Maitland was evidently not ignorant of the fact, that papa was the common appellation of all bishops, whether in or out of the City, for he distinctly states this, and gives in illustration the application of the term to the Bishops of Carthage and Hippo.

The author of these verses was a reader of Virgil, but does not seem to have profited by the perusal. The first line was, probably, suggested by the opening of the seventh book of the Æneid, in which the grave of Caieta—Æneia nutrix—is mentioned. The words magnis defuncte periculis are taken from Æn., vi., 83. See, also, ix., 98. The verses, that are found in ancient epitaphs, present many examples of violation of the ordinary rules of syntax and prosody. "In [Greece] and Italy, as in England, the Muse of the cemetery was an 'unlettered Muse.'" See Kenrick, "Roman Sepulchral Inscriptions," p. 21.

Northcote, "The Roman Catacombs," p. 136, observes:—"It is a very singular fact, that there are actually more instances of alumni

* His remarks are merely a reproduction of Maitland's.

† Maitland's reference here, seems to be to the use of sedere in the sense "to hold a bishopric," and we find such expressions as sedit annos decem denoting the time during which a person occupied the office of Bishop. This use of sedere is, however, not peculiar to Episcopi. In De Rossi, n. 879, an epitaph of a Presbyter, we find the words QVI SEDIT PBB.

among the sepulchral inscriptions of Christians, than among the infinitely more numerous sepulchral inscriptions of Pagans; showing clearly that this was an act of charity to which the early Christians were much addicted, and the alumni, when their foster-parents died, very properly and naturally recorded upon their tombs this act of charity, to which they were themselves so deeply indebted." I have not compared, by counting, the number of instances of such inscriptions, but I have reason to think, that the opposite opinion is true. Of all the dated Christian epitaphs of Rome, in number between 1300 and 1400, I have not noticed one of an alumnus, and this is the only example of a memorial to a foster-parent.

In Henzen's n. 7418, a Pagan titulus, we have the similar phrase, spiritus inter Deos receptus, where, also, the word refrigerat or refrigeras, so common in Christian epitaphs, is strangely used. It is remarkable that this same expression occurs in another Pagan epitaph, given by Muratori, 978, 9, with the statement: "Romæ. In Coemeterio Callisti. Ex Boldetto." The commencement of the two epitaphs is identical: D·M· in hoc tumulo jacet corpus exanimis (exanime) cujus spiritus inter Deos receptus est; sic enim meruit. And in both we have, cujus fama in eterna (in Muratori, æterno) nota est; but the division into lines is not the same, and, besides many other differences, the name of the deceased in the former, is M. Ulpus Maximus, in the latter, L. Staius Onesimus. Henzen, n. 6344, copies the inscription to Prosenes, but without the lines given above in smaller type, and, consequently, treats the inscription as Pagan.

Hence, in epitaph n. 46, I should prefer the translation, "Lampadius and Soteres, his most affectionate brother and sister," to the version Rossi, p. 577, justly rejects this, observing that the *character between R and A contains two letters, and may be read either MI, or INI, or even AN. l. 2. RSXII. Ancient Rome was divided into fourteen Regions. This baker had his shop in the twelfth. Thus, in Orelli, n. 1455, we have pistor Romaniensis ex regione XIII. ll. 4, 5. Domnus. Domina, like the Greek κυρία, = our "Mistress," was a term of respect applied to females. It is commonly applied to the same who were otherwise called "Sanctæ." l. 5. Sitiretis. This Saint is said to have suffered martyrdom, in the Appian Road, under Diocletian and Maximian, 304, A.D. See Aringhi, i., p. 288. l. 7. F. Vincenti. As he alone is mentioned, it appears that the name of the Eastern Consul, Fravitus, or Fravita, was not at the time known in Rome; and yet the plural—VVCC CONSS—is used, as if both names had been given.

It seems as if it might also be read NV, or MV, or NN. De Rossi, in his comment, remarks: "Vox, quæ postremis versus primi et prioribus secundi litteris continetur, nullies a me tentata est, sed irritò semper conatu." As this has, also, been the result of my experience, I merely state my impression, that the word is an Ethnic adjective, like Romaniensis.

In the expansion I have corrected the formula given for the Consulship. It was, doubtless, Consulatu Symmacho et Boetio Viris Clarissimis Consulibus. In De Rossi's, n. 977, we have the strange mixture, Consulatu Symmachi et Boeti Viris Consulibus.

I have adopted Marini's interpretation of Holographus, as explained by De Rossi, but I know no ancient authority for this signification. Here rests a very sweet boy, Gordianus, son of the above mentioned; buried on the Ides of September (i.e. September 13th), in the Consulship of Symmachus, a most distinguished man, i.e. 485, A.D. Here rests Emiliania, a sacred virgin: buried on the fifth day before the Ides of December (i.e. December 9th), in the Consulship of Probino, a most distinguished man," i.e. 489, A.D.

l. 1. Levitæ. This term is used for Diaconus, as the latter is unsuitable for hexameters. The difficulty is got over sometimes by syncope, scil. Diaconus, as by Venantius; sometimes by using Zaconus, for Diaconus. I have regarded Petronia as supposed to speak from the beginning. Others will, perhaps, prefer taking the first verse as expressed by the author of the epitaph. De Rossi's comment is well worth reading. It contains a most ingenious and conclusive argument, that Gregory the Great was a descendant of the persons named in this epitaph.

SE. These letters were repeated in mistake by the stone-cutter. Reinesius assigns 414, A.D., as the date of this inscription, but there is no ground for fixing even the century. Jacuti places it in the fourth; but De Rossi's suggestion, that it was of the sixth or seventh, is much more probable. This inscription, is, at present, to be seen in the portico of the Basilica of St. Mark: it is, however, not the original, for that is not extant, but a modern copy on marble.

Locus Basileonis, se bibo (se vivo, vivus) fecit. Xene (Xenæ) benemerenti in pace. Deposita, pridie Nonas Novembres, Consulatu Honorii Augusti VII et Theodosii (Theodosii) iterum Augustorum.

“The place of Basileo. He when alive made it. To Xene well-deserving in peace. Buried on the day before the Nones of November in the Consulship of Honorius Augustus, for the seventh time, and Theodosius for the second time, the two Augusti,” i. e. November 4th, 407 A. D.

1. 2. se bibo. In Pagan epitaphs such forms are found as se vivo, se vivus, se vivis, me vivus. Fecit. This word is used in various connexions. In n. 31, I have noticed its use with cum in the sense “spend.” We find it, also, with fatum, scil. fatum fecit = died; and with titulus, scil. titulum fecit = “made the inscription” or “caused the inscription to be made;” also with locus, scil. locum fecit = “made the place of burial” or “caused the place to be made.” F. C. = faciendum curavit, so common in Heathen epitaphs, is very rare in Christian. In both cases, I suspect, the place of burial was, sometimes, actually made by the person himself. Thus in Heuzen’s n. 6394 — communi labore sibi fecerunt. 1. 3. Xene. I have regarded this name as Greek, although I do not recollect having ever met with an example of it. Xenis occurs, and also Xinna, which Reinesius strangely believed to stand for Cinna.

This stone is remarkable as presenting the most ancient example of the representation of the cross in dated epitaphs. This symbol of Christianity, so common in inscriptions from the latter part of the fifth century, does not appear in any one of those of the first four centuries. The monogrammatic cross, as it is called, was used before this, not however as early as 209, as Zannoni inferred from an inscription given by Boldetti, p. 83. There is, certainly, a monogrammatic cross in that epitaph, but the date is 456, as is evident from the words DÑ AVITI, i. e. Domini Nostri Aviti scil. the emperor of that name. Boldetti, who was not aware of the Consulship of Avitus Augustus, interpreted the words as referring to Avitus, Consul in 209. The same careless investigator, p. 351, introduced a new fashion of cross on the authority of a stone that he found in the Catacomb of St. Agnes. This he not only figured, but described as a decussated cross transfixed with a spear, whilst it is really no more than an imperfect Constantinian monogram. His mistake led to serious waste of time and trouble, for some learned men, as De Rossi remarks, arcanam significationem inani labore investigarunt. See Cavedoni, Bull. dell' Ist. 1843, p. 152. Aringhi, vol. ii. pp. 377–380, furnishes another example of the result of extravagant symbolism. More than four columns of his work are devoted to the explanation of certain figures, that he calls representations of the heart, in the inscriptions found in the Catacombs, and the subject is illustrated by various quotations from the Holy Scriptures, the Fathers, and Greek and Latin heathen authors. These figures, however, on which so much learning is wasted, are in reality nothing more than leaf-points, or leaf-decorations, that are commonly found in both Christian and Pagan inscriptions. See examples in Plate iii. 2. Nor was this ridiculous mistake limited to Aringhi. Boldoni suggested that the figure—unquestionably a leaf with a stem—signified dolorem cordi intimum, and Grasser believed that it was the representation cordis spina transfixa, and meant cordolium!

The Constantinian monogram is, as might be expected, of frequent occurrence on Christian sepulchral stones, but a great object of search relative to this symbol has been to find an example before the year 312 A. D. It was believed that one was found on a stone discovered by Boldetti, of the date 291 A. D., but De Rossi, n. 17, has, I think, correctly regarded this figure as merely an ornamental point. He himself, however, gives an example (n. 26), which may be, but cannot certainly be proved to be, of the date 298 A. D. The *earliest that I have noticed is of the date 331 A. D.

* I do not take into account the use of crosses and monograms before Christianity, the meaning of which was of course different from the Christian signification. Examples of the gammadion occur on Roman altars found in Britain.

Co(n)stat nos emisse, Januarium et Britium, locum ante domina (dominam) Emerita (Emeritam), a fossoribus (fossoribus) Burdone et Micinium (Micino) et Musco, ratione auri solidum (solidi) unum (unius) semessem (semissis), Consulibus Dominis Nostris Theodosio et Valentiniano iterum.

"It is unquestionable that we Jannarius and Britia bought a place in front of (the sepulchre of) Lady Emerita from the diggers Burdo and Micinus and Muscus for the consideration of one solidus of gold and a half in the Consulship of our Lords Theodosius and Valentinian for the 2nd time," i. e. 426 A. D.

The formula constat nos emisse is not rare in monuments of this age, whence it appears that the line between constat and nos is merely a mark of punctuation. The sepulchre of Saint Emerita was in the cemetery of Commodilla, behind the basilica of St. Paul.

She and Digna are said to have suffered death at Rome, under Valerian and Gallienus.

The solidus was originally called the aureus. It had different values at different periods. From the time of Constantine there were 72 (OB) coined to the pound of gold. The semissis and tremissis were coins respectively $\frac{1}{2}$ and $\frac{1}{3}$ of the solidus. Northcote, "Roman Catacombs," p. 23, notices this inscription, and remarks, "A solidus and a half the price paid for a single [?] grave was a sum equivalent to about eighteen shillings [sterling] of our own coin."

Was this an intimation that it was for sale? I have not seen Ratti's comment on this inscription, which was published in Atti della pont. accad. d'arch., but De Rossi's notice of it is very unfavorable. * I have given this epitaph in illustration of locus bisomus, chiefly on account of the words bisomus vacat; but the locus seems to have been quadrisomus, space for two bodies being unoccupied.

"Calevius sold to Avinius a place for three bodies, where both Calvilius and Lucius had (already) been placed in peace, in the Consulship of Stilicho," i. e. 400 A. D.

The stone that bears this inscription is remarkable on account of the symbols that are cut on it, viz., the monogram, the balance, the fish, the candelabrum with seven lights, the house, and the mummy in a receptacle approached by steps. Of the monogram and the fish I have already spoken. The candelabrum with seven lights, or the seven-branched candlestick, is frequently represented on the grave-stones of Jews, and was adopted from them by Christians, with, perhaps, a different meaning. The balance may have been derived from the notion of Psychostasy, which was Eastern in its origin, and to which the weighing of the Fates of Achilles and Hector in the Iliad is analogous. With it may be compared the expression used relative to Belsazzar in Daniel, v. 27. Or does the symbol merely indicate the just dealing of the deceased?

The house may have been used as indicative of the last dwelling-place, and the mummy certainly represents Lazarus and is symbolical of the resurrection. De Rossi refers to the discussion of these symbols by Mamachi, Orig. ch. iii., Munter, Sinnbilder, p. 57, Didron, Hist. de Dieu, p. 339, Raoul Rochette, Mem. de l'Acad. des inscr. xiii. 244, and by himself in Spicil. Solesm. iii. p. 549. Aringhi, ii. p. 357, figures the stone and illustrates the meaning as usual, by citations of all kinds from the authors of the Old and of the New Testament, from Origen, Irenæus, Jerome, Augustine, Chrysostom, and Gregory. And yet in this, as in other collections of quotations in Aringhi's work, the result, so far as definiteness of explanation is concerned, is very unsatisfactory.

* In Henzen's n. 6371 there is a similar prayer. I subjoin the inscription, as it is in some respects peculiar:—*Alexander Augg. ser. fecit se vivo Marco filio dulcissimo, caputafricesi, qui deputabatur inter bestitores (vestitores) qui vixit annis XVIII mensibu VIII diebu V. Sometimes the anathema is resorted to, as in the following, found in the island of Salamis, and given by Kirchoff, n. 9303 :

"Flavius Julius, a deacon, and Aurelia Meria his wife, whilst living, erected this sarcophagus for themselves. If any one after our decease shall take on himself to open this sarcophagus, let him pay as the penalty fifty pounds of silver to the church at Salona."

"Julius, the deacon, was buried on the fourth day before the Calends of November, in the Consulship of Datianus and Cerealis," i. e. October 29th, 358 A. D.

l. 1. Zaconus. See note on epitaph 65. Muratori observes :—

“Zaconus et Zaconis est pro Diaconus et Diaconis, uti Zabulus pro Diabolus, Zeta pro Dieta.”

I have regarded Zaconis as given in mistake for Zaconus, and think that the correctness of this view is confirmed by the name “Julius.”

l. 7. Inferat, &c. The naming of a penalty for violation of the grave is of very common occurrence in Pagan epitaphs, both Greek and Latin.

There is scarcely one of the *designations of the place of burial used in Christian epitaphs, so far as I recollect, that is peculiar to them. Locus, tumulus, memoria, cubiculum, sepulchrum, sarcophagus, &c., are found in Pagan inscriptions, from which, also, †domus æterna, although inconsistent with belief in the resurrection, has been inadvertently borrowed. See De Rossi, nn. 159, 173.

“To Valentina, who lived thirty-six years. She departed on the sixth day before the Calends of March, Friday, the seventeenth day of the Moon,” i. e. February 24th, 411 or 327 A.D.

In this inscription the Consuls are not mentioned ; nor is there any other form of expression for the year used ; and yet the full date may be inferred from what is therein stated. It is plain that it must be a year in which February 24th and the 17th day of the Moon fell on Friday. Marini’s comments are :—“Hujus inscriptionis characteres, si auctor veterem ecclesiæ cyclum annorum LXXIV sequutus est,

* I have not observed quadrisomus in any Pagan epitaph.

† This form or domus æternalis is unusually common in the epitaphs of Pomaria in Algeria. See Renier, n. 456. In different localities, as might be expected, different forms were popular. Thus pîus often occurs in African, and carus suis in Spanish epitaphs.

De Rossi discusses the subject, and shows that the choice lies between 327 and 411, as in 495 the Victorian canon was in use at Rome, according to which we should have had luna XV, not XXII. Of the two the first, 327, is preferable, as the characteristics of the inscription, i. e. the absence of contractions and the use of the ancient term decessit, point to the earlier date.

"A boy born (Alpha Omega) in the Consulship of the deified Jovian Augustus, and Varronianus (i. e. 364 A.D.), in the fourth hour of the night, ——— the eighth day before the Ides of May, i. e. May 8th, on Saturday, the twentieth day of the Moon, in the sign of Capricorn, by name Simplicius."

1. 1. Puer natus. This is no uncommon beginning. See n. 88, and notes on it. 1. 2. Divo Joviano. This Emperor died on the XIV Kal. Martias, in the year 334 A.D., and after that date was styled, as was usual, Divus. Christians used the ordinary term, in the sense "deceased" or "late," without regard to the sense assigned by Pagans.

1. 5. In vxit. It is difficult to determine what was the word intended by the unskilful workman who cut the inscription. Maffei, Mus. Ver. p. 252, makes two attempts at it:—"fortasse inluxit intelligendum, hoc est lucidus moriendo evasit; fortasse inussit, pro inustus est fidei nota, seu baptismate." Le Blant, Inscr. Chrét. de la Gaule t. i. p. 479, reads "induxit," i. e. inducit albas = was baptized. See n. 88, and notes on it. Guaseo, iii. p. 141, n. 1235, suggests "inluxit," in the sense (according to De Rossi)—Simplicium natum hora noctis quarta simul ac inluxerat dies VIII Idus Maii. De Rossi objects to this—that the hours were astrologically counted not from midnight but from sunset, and, after stating Maffei's and Le Blant's views, remarks that the words are novæ prorsus et Christianis titulis inauditæ. He himself suggests, "In vixit" in the sense—vixit in VIII Idus Maias. i. e. Simplicius was born in the fourth hour of the night and lived only for the one day—May 5th. There are, I think, but few scholars that would accept the views of Maffei or Le Blant. Guaseo's is recommended by similar phraseology in Muratori's n. 2, p. 431—"Obiit bonæ memoriæ Cæsaria medium noctis die Dominica inlucescente VI id. Decembris." Thus also Suetonius, Cæsar, c. 81—Ea nocte, cui illuxit dies cædis, &c. In Kirehoff's n. 9119 we have the corresponding Greek phrase—ἐπιφωσκέ[ουσα] τῆς ὀρθότητος τοῦ Ἄ [ουρ] μηνός. But I am not satisfied. The objection to De Rossi's reading is—that he does not supply the letter in the place left vacant by the stone cutter scil. between N and V. Can it be that the vacant space was intended for the monogram, with the letters ΑΩ incorporated with it, as they often were, and that this having been omitted either from the ignorance or inadvertence of the workman, ΑΩ were cut in the corner, but yet should be read between In and vixit—scil. "in ΑΩ vixit" i. e. in Deo or Christo vixit, in the sense "lived in God," "died?" See n. 65, &c.

1. 6. Die Saturni luna vigesima signo Capricorno. This inscription has been discussed chronologically and astronomically by Blanchini, Lupi and Marini, but De Rossi is the first who has shown that the notices in it are really astrological, and that they should be regarded as forming a horoscope of birth. Thus, p. LXXXIV, he proves that each of these characteristics—scil. the fourth hour of Saturday, the Moon in Capricorn, and the twentieth day of the May moon—was regarded as unlucky. See also his comment.

1. 1. nomine. Whether we regard Severi as used for Severus, or governed by some word understood, it seems certain that nomine should be joined to the name following, as in De Rossi's nn. 41, 49, 172, 229, &c. De Rossi remarks: “Ille, cujus hoc est epitaphium, paterno sive materno cognomine Severus appellatus Paschasii quoque agnomen habuit, quod natus erat anno 457 die Jovis paschali.” 1. 2. dies Paschales. Used for die Paschali. These dies Paschales, as we know from a law of the Emperor Valentinian, Cod. Theodos. ii. 8, 2, were in number 15, 7 before and 7 after Easter-day. pridie Nonas Apriles die Jovis, i. e. on Thursday, April the 4th, in Easter week, for in the year 457 A. D. (scil. the year in which Constantine and Rufus were Consuls), according to both Roman and Alexandrian calculation, Easter-day was observed on March the 31st. 1. 5. percepit, i. e. baptisma percepit, “received baptism.” Percipio* is similarly used in heathen inscrip-

* In some instances, where this verb is used, it is difficult to decide whether the inscription is Christian or Pagan. Thus in Henzen's n. 6147:—D. M. Murtius Verinus pater Murtie Verine et Murtie Florianeni filibus malemerentibus crudelis pater titulum iscripsit. Verina percepit M. X, vixit annos XII, menses V, Florianes percepit M. XII, vixit annis VIII, M. III. Innocentes acceperunt a suo patre quod ei debuerant; and in Mommsen's 1. N. n. 3160:—D. M. Ingeniosa que vixit annis tions, where it is applied to those who had participated in the mystic rites of the Mater Deum Magna Idæa or of Mithras, known as the Taurobolium* and Criobolium. Thus we have—percepto Taurobolio Criobolioque, in an inscription, given by De Rossi n. 24, of the date 319 A. D.; in Orelli's n. 2130, of the date 390 A. D.; in his n. 2335, of the date 376 A. D.; in Henzen's n. 6040, of the date 370 A. D.; in Muratori's n. 4, p. 389, of the date 383 A. D.; and also in Reinesius, Cl. 1, 40 (without date), whose note is worth reading. In Muratori's n. 2, p. 371, of the date 305 A. D., we have the words Taurobolium percepti felic(iter).

The oldest example of the taurobolium, of which I am aware, was in 175 A. D. See Fleetwood, p. 11; Fabretti, p. 665; and Reinesius, as above.

Another term, in which there is a strange agreement, is renatus, applied by Christians to the baptized—as in De Rossi's n. 270, (cā desti renatus (aq)ua qui vivit in (ævum) (see also n. 36—natus est in æternum)—and by Pagans to the Tauroboliti. Thus Taurobolio Criobolioque in æternum renatus, in Orelli's n. 2352, of the date 376 A. D.; and arcanis perfusionibus in æternum renatus Taurobolium Crioboliumque fecit in Henzen's n. 6040. These mystic rites seem to have been a mixture of the cults of the Magna Mater and Mithras, with the addition of some Christian principles and terms.

1. 6. XI Calendas Maias. From the words Octavas Paschæ, and Basilio Consule, it is evident that this day—scil. April 21st—was Easter-day in the year 463 A. D., and that Severus was baptized, according to custom, on its vigil, the day being counted, as usual, from Saturday to Sunday evening. But here a great difficulty presents itself. According to the tables of Noris, Easter-day should in this year, conformably to Roman calculation, have been celebrated on IX Calendas Apriles, i. e. March 24th. The learned Cardinal discusses the subject

III, M. V, Dies XXI. Fide percepti messorum VII. Aur. Fortunius pater filie. Henzen regards fide as used for filium; I am inclined to take it as an adverb.

* The Taurobolium and Criobolium were respectively sacrifices of a bull and a ram, on the occasion of initiations. The persons who received them (qui percepterunt) descended into a deep pit, which was covered over with a wooden platform composed of pierced planks. On this platform the animal was killed, and the persons beneath presented their bodies to receive the blood, as it descended through the holes. The result was believed to be purification that lasted for twenty years, or everlasting regeneration.

ad fastos consulares anonymi and de pasch. Lat. cyclo, where he suggests two solutions, both of which have been proved to be erroneous, one by Van der Hagen, and the other by De Rossi. The latter shows that by the old Roman calculation of the cycle of 84 years, before it was amended by Prosper, and also by the Victorian correction, Easter-day was observed in the year 463 A.D., on the XI Calendas Maias, i. e. April 21st, not on the IX Calendas Apriles, or March 24th.

II. 6, 7. albas suas Octabas Pasce ad sepulcrum deposuit. White dresses (albæ) were worn by those receiving baptism. On the Sunday next after Easter Sunday, i. e. the Octave of Easter-day, these dresses were laid aside, whence this Sunday was called Dominica in Albis. Paschasius was buried on the day on which, according to usage, he should have laid aside his albs or white clothes.

[A]nj(ustas) Vespasiano III Consule.—Jan(uariar.)

“ ——— before the Calends (?) of August, in the third Consulship of Vespasian” (i. e. 71 A.D.) “ ——— before the Calends of January.”

This fragment has been received as a part of a Christian epitaph by Reggi, Marini, and De Rossi. It is the most ancient of all such that bear dates. The chief grounds on which it has been regarded as Christian are that the slab is of the same kind as those used to close the tombs in the Catacombs, and that it had adhering to it the mortar by which such slabs were fixed in their places. To these grounds De Rossi has made an important addition, by his reading IAN as Januarias, thus showing that the stone closed a locus bisomus, containing the bodies of one who had died—before the Calends [?] of August, and of another who had died—before the Calends of January.

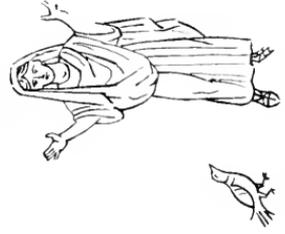

In the year 71 Vespasian was Consul for the third time, with Cocceius Nerva as his colleague. On the 1st of March or April he resigned the office, and, on the 1st of July, L. Flavius Fimbria and Attilius Barbarus were made consules suffecti. The year then is marked here, as in other Christian epitaphs, not by the names of the suffecti, but by that of one of the ordinarii.

(b) Unexplained numerals :—

N·XXX· SVRA ET SENEC· COSS·

*(E cocmet. Lucinae; De Rossi, n. 2.)*N·XXX· Sura et Senecione Consulibus."In the Consulship of Sura and Senecio," i. e. 107 A. D.

The numeral III is omitted after SVRA and II after SENEC. See De Rossi's note.

I have not attempted to translate "N·XXX·," as their meaning is unknown. The interpretation that has been generally received is that they stand for numero XXX, indicating that martyrs were buried there in number thirty. This view has been taken by Visconti, Cavedoni, Raoul Rochette, and Wiseman. Roestel also assents, but regards the inscription as commemorative of a past age. De Rossi objects, in my judgment with good reason, to this *interpretation. He calls in question the genuineness or analogy of the other inscriptions usually compared with this as confirming the sense assigned to it, and points out the improbability that the stone marked a loculus in the Catacombs, as the greatest number of bodies contained in such is 4. He suggests that the inscription may be imperfect, and that thus N may be regarded as the last letter of ANN. i. e. annorum, scil. annorum XXX, the person, whose name preceded, being of thirty years of age. It is remarkable that in this De Rossi was anticipated by Maitland, who (p. 58) "reads the words as the fragment of qui vixit ann. XXX Syrra et Senec. coss, who lived thirty years. In the Consulate of Syrra and Senecio; that is, A.D. 102." I cannot concur in this explanation. It suits this particular case, but is wholly inapplicable in others e. gr. in Fabretti, p. 574, 61, we have the epitaph of Leopardus, a boy whose age is stated to have been 7 years and 7 months. At the commencement of it are the letters—DMASACRVM XI, i. e. Dis Manibus Sacrum. 40. Again, in the Catacomb of St. Agnes, De Rossi found LIX on the loculus of an infant. Nor can

* This view might seem to be as old as the time of Prudentius (scil. the 4th century), for he writes :—

Sunt et multa tamen tacitas claudientia turbas, Marmorata que solum significant numerum.

But the reference here seems to be to Polyandria—pits containing many dead bodies—not to loculi, of which, so far as I am aware, there is no example of their containing more than four.

Amati's positive assertion that they indicate loculorum ordines be received, for this is contrary to the experience of those who have personally examined the Catacombs. To me it seems evident that there is no sufficient reason for believing either that these numerals indicate the number of bodies buried within, or that the deceased were Martyrs. I can offer no satisfactory solution: it has seemed to me, however, not improbable that the numbers were the marks of workmen—the fossores or their assistants—who may have been paid according to the number of loculi excavated or of slabs put up. I have observed a similar notation in a Pagan epitaph, given by Orelli, n. 5008:—N. III. Id. Nov. Diis Manibus Dilivæ Q. F. Quintinæ Lucretia Priscus uxori optimæ V. A. XXVII. Labus remarks:—“Numero tertio, Idibus Novembribus: cioè la pietra, il cippo, il monumento ecc. era posto nel terrea sacro al No. 3.”

(d) Use of D. M. by Christians:— 92.

P · LIBERIO VIXIT ANN Ñ · V · MENS

FAVSTO ET VIRIO GAL ·

(E coem. ?; De Rossi, n. 24.)

Diis Manibus. Publio Liberio, vixit annos numero V, menses numero III, dies numero VIII. Reccessit Anicio Fausto et Virio Gallo (Consulibus).

“To the Gods the Manes. To Publius Liberius. He lived years in number five, months in number three, days in number eight. He retired (from this world) in the Consulship of Faustus and Virius Gallus, i. e. 298 A.D.”

We have here an example of the use of the heathen formula D. M., Diis Manibus, in an epitaph that De Rossi and other scholars regard as Christian. I have noticed this anomaly in Part XI of my “Notes on Latin Inscriptions found in Britain” (Canadian Journal, X. p. 95), and ascribed it either to thoughtless use of the Gamma, produced by familiarity with it as the ordinary commencement of a sepulchral inscription, or to the fact, that grave-stones were kept for sale with these letters cut on them, and were purchased by Christians without consideration of their appropriateness. Fabretti in 1740, that these letters when they occur in a Christian epitaph, stand for Deo Magno, or Deo Maximo; but there is no doubt that his opinion is erroneous, for the form is found, in at least one such inscription, IN CAUSA, S. C. P. S. FLAVIUS. See Orelli, n. 4458—4723, and compare Maitland, "Church in the Catacombs," pp. 59, 60, 61, who regards this inscription to Christus as 'almost certainly Pagan.' The same view of it is taken by Westel. I incline, however, to the belief that it is Christian. My reasons are that it was found in one of the Catacombs, that the stone was not broken, and that we find in the inscription the letter R used for recessit, requisivit, or reddidit. See Epitaph, n. 1. Maitland's version of this inscription is liable to just censure. In his text, he gives R before ANICIO, but takes no notice of it either in his translation or in his remarks. Again, the date is given by him as A. D. 93; and although one would be disposed to explain this error by supposing that 2 was accidentally omitted before 93, by a typographical mistake, it is impossible to accept this solution, for, in pp. 53, 59, he notices this inscription as of earlier date than two others, one of A. D. 102, and the other of A. D. 111. In Westropp's "Handbook of Archaeology," p. 250, we have the same inscription, with the same neglect of R in translation, and with the date A. D. 102. The same author assigns A. D. 100 for the inscription relative to Marius, and A. D. 100 for that relative to Alexander, without sufficient ground for assigning either year.

The most remarkable of the Christian epitaphs, that have the Gamma formula in the commencement, is a well known one to Leopards, discussed by Fabretti, p. 574, and by Raoul Rochette, in a "Mémoire sur les antiquités chrétiennes des catacombes," in Mon. de l'Académie des inscript. et belles lettres, XIII.

The inscription, as given by Fabretti, stands thus :

DMA SACRVM XL
 LEOPARDVM IN PACEM
 CVM SPIRITA SANTA · ACCEP
 TVM EVMTE ABEATIS INNOCINEM
 POSVER · PAR · Q · AN · N · VII · MEN · VII ·

In Raoul Rochette's *copy, we have evinte for eumte in the fourth line, and G for Q in the fifth. Mabillon discovered in this inscription a manifest reference to the rite of confirmation. Fabretti gravely corrects this interpretation, as he found in it a manifest reference to the rite of baptism! Raoul Rochette judiciously maintained that †neither was right. He remarks—"Il n'est question, dans ces expressions d' une latinité barbare, d' aucun de ces sacrements de l' Eglise; ou reconnoît une foule d' exemples de ces mots; cum spirito, ispirito, hispirito sancto, cum spirita sancta, altérés d' une manière plus ou moins vicieuse, et qui ne peuvent s'entendre que de l'ame même du chrétien, admise après la mort dans le séjour des bienheureux, en vertu de la synonymie connu des mots anima et spiritus, dans le vocabulaire de la basse latinité." He closes his observations on the inscription by proposing the following expansion :

" *Divis martyrîbus sacrum quadraginta
Leopardum in pace
cum Spiritu sancto acceptum eundem habeatis. † Innocentem posuerunt parentes. qui [vixit] annis VII, mensibus VII.*"

It is very difficult to infer from the two copies that I have before me—viz., Fabretti's and Raoul Rochette's—the true reading of the inscription; but I entertain no doubt that both Mabillon's and Fabretti's interpretations should be rejected, and that Raoul Rochette's view as to cum spirita sancta is correct. At the same time, his expansion—Divis Martyrîbus sacrum quadraginta—is clearly inadmissible. There is no authority in any epitaph for this rendering. Nor is there any reasonable doubt that the letters DMA stand for Diis Manibus,

* As given in Dictionnaire d'Épigraphie Chrétienne, ii. p. 758.

† Lupi held the same opinion, viz., that there was no reference to either baptism or confirmation. He explains the 2d, 3d, and 4th lines thus: Leopardum in pacem (pace) cum Spirita Sancta (Spiritus Sanctos, Spiritibus Sanctis) acceptum eumte (eundem) abeatis innocinem (habeatis innocentem). Corsini, Not. Græc. Diss. ii. p. xxxvi, rejects this view, and proposes the following as preferable:—Leopardum in pace cum Spiritu Sancto (the Holy Spirit). Acceptum eundem a Beatis (the Blessed) innocentem posuerunt Parentes.

‡ I have given this whole expansion, as it appears in Dictionnaire d'Épigraphie Chrétienne, for I am unable to refer to the original article in the Mem. de l'Académie. I am not satisfied, however, that either the presence or the absence of the points is as Raoul Rochette intended: the authority of the Dictionnaire is not worth considering.

as Mabillon understood them; whilst the signification of XL, as I have observed in my note on Epitaph, n. 90, remains to be discovered. The rest of his expansion is probable, except the omission of numero after annis, which should be introduced, if Fabretti's punctuation be correct. But another, and a very remarkable, peculiarity of the inscription, hitherto unnoticed, remains to be considered—i. e. the use of the expression acceptum habeatis with the dedication Dis Manibus in a Christian epitaph. If we compare this with the words—Manes sanctissimæ [sic] commendatum habeatis meum conjugem in Orelli's n. 4775, a Pagan epitaph, and Sanctique tui Manes nobis petentibus adsint in Gruter's, 1061, 7, a Christian epitaph, there can, I think, be but little doubt that some Christians of the early ages retained some of the Pagan superstitions. See Mabillon, p. 75, and Morcelli, Stil. ii. 71, 72. To me it is plain, that whatever difference of opinion may arise as to the exact reading of this inscription to Leopardus, there can be no question that in it his parents asked the Di Manes, the Pagan deities of the unseen world after death, to receive with favor their innocent son. Nor can there be any doubt that the inscription is Christian, for this is proved by the use of the terms—in pacem, cum spirita santa. On the latter see Epitaph, n. 42; and on the use of Christian terms in Pagan inscriptions, see notes on Epitaphs 49, 88.

Buried on the seventh day before the Calends of September (i. e. August 26th), who lived twenty-four years, seven months, fifteen days; to him well deserving in peace.”

On first sight of this inscription, it seems strange that a person of twenty-four years of age should be called puer, and that he should be said to have been born and buried in the same year. The explanation is that natus is used with reference to birth by baptism, estimated by which Mercurius was but puer at the time of his death. See De Rossi's n. 173, and 193.

1. 4. Perit in dies V. This notice of the period of sickness is very rare. We have another example in De Rossi's n. 8 :—ἐνόσησεν ἡμέρας ᾗ. 1. 5. Post consulatum Victoris et Valentiniani. It is strange that this form should be used to denote the year, instead of the ordinary form—Valentiniano III et Valente III—especially as we have examples of the use of this latter in Christian epitaphs of January and March. No satisfactory reason can be assigned for this variation, which is also used in other cases apparently capriciously.

1. 1. DDNN. The phrase Domini Nostri is commonly applied to the Emperors; here it is used regarding private persons, who were Consuls. There are, also, other examples of this of earlier date. Hence Corsini, Zaccaria, and Cancelleri inferred that from the close of the 4th century, Consuls were usually styled Domini. Muratori, Hagenbuch, and De Rossi, more correctly, ascribe this use to inadvertency and mistake on the part of the stone-cutters.

I have given this as an example of the tabulæ opisthographæ, that are sometimes found in the Catacombs, scil. tablets on which a Pagan inscription had been cut, but which were subsequently used for a Christian epitaph.

Nonius Atticus had Maximus as his agnomen. It has been inferred from a lamp bearing the monogram, and his name—Noni Attici VU et Inlustris, that he was a Christian. This inference has been confirmed by a proof of the Christianity of the Nonian family at this period, given by Minervini, in *Bull. Ursus, her husband, made (this) for himself and his blameless mate. She rests in peace."

I have selected this epitaph chiefly because the stone presents an illustration of the attitude of a person praying. This position was at one time so general, that those, who were suffering penance, were not permitted to stand up in the church during prayer.

The outstretched arms and uplifted hands were common to both Jews and Pagans. At one time this figure in the attitude of prayer was regarded as an emblem of martyrdom; and the crown and the palm-branch, also, were interpreted as having similar significance, but these theories have not stood investigation. The figure in prayer is certainly a proof of Christianity, but the crown and the palm-branch are found on Pagan tomb-stones. See Muratori Nov. Thesaur., 1828, 5, Antiq. Ital. diss. LVIII; Raoul Rochette, Mem. sur les Antiq. Chrét. p. ii. § 2; Cardinal Mai, Vet. Script. Nov. Collect. V, p. 3, n. 1; and De Rossi, n. 30.

No symbol has so far been suggested as a criterion of martyrdom, that has been universally accepted by scholars. And yet there are at present few, if any, who would give their assent to Dodwell's opinions de paucitate Martyrum, or to Burnet's views, in his "Letters from Switzerland, &c.," regarding the identity of the catacombs and puticuli.

Birds form one of the favorite decorations of Christian tombstones. The most common of these is the dove, represented singly or in pairs, with or without a branch in the mouth, sometimes perched on a tree, sometimes pecking at a bunch of grapes, and sometimes standing on a vase. Singly it has been regarded as the emblem of peace or of simplicity—in pairs it may have been, in some cases, the symbol of affection. It is Jewish in its origin, and was, doubtless, derived from the history of Noah. Two other birds are occasionally represented, the peacock and the phoenix. They are both Pagan in their origin, but were used by Christians as symbolical of the resurrection.

"In the second Consularship of our Lord Augustus Maximus Augustus (i. e. 285 A. D.), on the third day before the Ides of May (i. e. May 12th), Leo died, and was buried on the day before the Ides of May (i. e. May 14th). To him well deserving in peace."

1.2. Fatum fuit. This rare expression for d'functus est is found in some other Christian epitaphs. See Corsini, N. A. Græc. Diss. in
p. XXIV.

1.3. Depositus pridie Idus Maialis. Here the deceased was buried on the day after his death. Thus we find in Cramer, 1954. 1.—, na ecit die Mercurii hora VIII et deposita die Idus Maialis. Maierum.
i. e. she died on Wednesday and was buried on Thursday. See other examples in Corsini, Diss. i., p. 12. In Muratori's 1059. 9. we have an example of an interval of two days—Depositus III Id. i. e. he died on March 17th, and was buried on March 19th.

* Modern authors that are named without mention of the work or edition have been cited, generally, on the authority of De Rossi. In p. 65 the words—(E roem. S. Hippolyti; De Rossi, n. 345)—have been inadvertently omitted after the text of the Epitaph.
